

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 12, 1861.

THE war with China has been brought to a close, and The London Gazette Extraordinary of the 28th December, 1860, sets out the instruments by which this desirable end was accomplished, together with the correspondence and other documents connected with it. We do not intend to consider these transactions in their political or national light; but the mode in which the final convention was entered into, and the previous treaty ratified, present matters of international law which are deserving notice.

The object of the recent Anglo-Gallic expedition to China was, as is well known, to obtain from the Emperor of China the ratification of a treaty executed by his Plenipotentiaries at Tientsin on the 26th June, 1858, and to avenge the insult to the flags of both nations on a former occasion, when their ships attempted to pass up to Peking for that purpose. After a campaign, with the details of which our readers are familiar, the Prince of Kung presented himself as Imperial Commissioner on the part of the Emperor of China, who had retired from the capital to his imperial residence in Tartary, to conclude a peace with the Plenipotentiaries of England and France. Terms were agreed on, and the final ceremonies, so far as we are concerned, were gone through at the Hall of Ceremonies at Peking, between Prince Kung on the part of China, and Lord Elgin on that of Great Britain. On the next day a similar process was gone through at the same place between Prince Kung, acting as above, and Baron Gros, acting on the part of France. On both occasions the first step necessarily was to verify the credentials of the respective parties. Prince Kung produced the following as his:—

"On the 7th day of the 8th moon of the 10th year of the reign of Hein Fung (21st September, 1860), the Chief Secretariat had the honour to receive the following imperial decree:—

"We command Yih Su, Imperial Prince of Kung, to be Imperial Commissioner Plenipotentiary, with power to do whatever may be necessary to the exchanging of treaties and the making of peace between the two nations."

"Respect this!"

To this the following note is appended by Mr. Wade, one of the Chinese secretaries attached to the expedition:—

"The term 'tainen-kinen,' translated 'plenipotentiary,' is of foreign manufacture, and employed here, as on former occasions, out of deference to our prejudices. The plenipotentiary power, according to Chinese notions and usages, is really conferred by the words 'pien i hing sz,' to do the things which the occasion may demand as essential."

It does not appear whether this peculiarity in the language of the above instrument was pointed out to Lord Elgin by the interpreters on duty on the occasion in question.

After signing the convention, the remaining step was the ratification by the Chinese of the treaty of Tientsin. This was effected by Prince Kung affixing the Emperor's seal to the treaty, and the production of a certificate of Prince Kung, signed and sealed by him, declaring its apposition to be a full and valid act of imperial ratification. Lord Elgin, as appears from his letter to Lord John Russell of the 26th October, 1860, seems to have had some misgiving about this. He informs us that "before consenting to be satisfied with ratification in this form, I inquired what Baron Gros's views on the subject were, and I ascertained that he would be glad to have the certificate which I proposed to demand, but that he was quite willing to accept the seal as a valid act of ratification, even without any such certificate." The certificate is as follows:—

"The Prince of Kung, Commissioner and Plenipotentiary of his Majesty the Emperor of the Ta Tsing Dynasty, hereby executes a certificate.

"Be it known that the impression of the Hwang T'chi P'an (the fifth of the twenty-five seals of the empire), which has been reverently affixed to the foregoing treaty, the same being the treaty of peace concluded at Tientsin in the year 'wu'wu' (1858), is an attestation of the full assent of his Majesty the Emperor of China to; and his promise to abide by, all the articles therein, and renders unnecessary any separate authorisation by the imperial signature.

"This certificate is accordingly appended to this treaty, to serve as a record for evermore.

"Executed at Peking on the 11th day of the 9th moon, in the 10th year of the reign of Hien Fung" (24th October, 1860).

Acquainted, as we are by this time, with the Chinese character and diplomacy, the questions naturally present themselves—First, is the seal affixed to the treaty the seal of the Emperor at all? Secondly, assuming that it is, is it the proper seal, seeing that we are informed by Prince Kung's certificate that there are twenty-five seals used by the Emperor, and most probably for different purposes? Thirdly, assuming the seal to be the proper one, was it affixed by authority of the Emperor?

The above documents were these adduced by Prince Kung as the real or pretended delegate of the Emperor of China; but it may assist our speculations in this matter to contemplate a document not intended for our view, and derived from the Emperor himself:—

"Draft of an Imperial Rescript in vermilion, that is, in autograph, found in the Palace of Yuen-Ming-Yuen, on the 7th October, 1860.

"We have this day perused the reply of the American barbarians to the communication of Kweiliang and his colleagues.

"[It shews that] in the matter of their presentation at court, nothing more can be done to bring them to reason*. Besides, these barbarians, by their avowal that their respect for his Majesty the Emperor is the same as that they feel for their pih-li-si-tien-teh (President), just place China on a par with the barbarians of the South and East<sup>o</sup>—an arrogation of greatness which is simply ridiculous. The proposition of yesterday, that they should have an interview with the Prince, need not either be entertained."

The law of nations is of two kinds—the primary or original law of nations, which is derived solely from principles of reason and equity, and the secondary or conventional law of nations, which has been established by particular nations for their guidance in their intercourse with each other. (See Grotius de Jur., B. and P., Proleg.; and Vattel, Droit des Gens, Préface). In dealing with the Chinese it is to the former of these we must appeal; for it would be alike unjust and absurd to endeavour to bind that people by artificial rules of international law created in Europe. Now, according to the primary law of nations, and perhaps the secondary also, the ratification of a treaty concluded by mandataries or plenipotentiaries need not be in any particular form. "On peut appliquer ici toutes les règles du droit naturel, sur les choses qui se font par commission." (Vattel, liv. 2, c. 12, s. 156). And Grotius, lib. 3, c. 22, s. 3, says, "Summe et alii modi quibus potestas summa obligatur antecedente ministrorum facto, sed non ita ut id factum causa sit proprie dicta, sed ut occasio sit obligationis: idque dupliciter, vel per consensum, vel per rem ipsam. Consensus apparet ratificationis, non tantum expressus sed et tacita, id est ubi scivit summa potestas quod actum erat, et fieri passus est, quæ ad aliam causam referri probabiliter non possunt," &c. (See also Id., lib. 2, cap. 4, s. 5, and c. 15, s. 17). Hence it follows, that if the Chinese Government act on or recognise the treaty in any way, it will be a sufficient ratification to satisfy the law of nations.

Before dismissing the subject we wish to direct attention to the title of the Emperor of China in these instruments. In the treaty of Tientsin he is styled "The Emperor of China;" and in the convention at Peking, "His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China;" thus dropping the title "His Celestial Majesty," by which he was formerly known, and, we believe, was designated in the treaty executed with China by Sir Henry Pottinger, and certainly in the negotiations of that period.

THE CANADA EXTRADITION CASE.

(From the Toronto Globe).

ROBINSON, C. J., first pronounced his judgment.—After a long review of the facts of the case, the evidence submitted against the prisoner, and the circumstances attending his arrest and commitment by the magistrates, the learned judge said—The point which has been argued before us, and the only point, is, what construction and effect it is proper to give to those words in the treaty, and in our statute of the 22 Vict. c. 8, s. 1 (Consolidated Statutes of Canada), which, when read together, in effect provide, that a person charged with committing, within any of the * * * Lit. There cannot be any more good means for bringing them round (to the right way). Argument is exhausted, so let the question of an audience drop."

* "The Miran, ancient barbarians of the South, the I of the East."

United States of America, any of the offences mentioned in the treaty—that is to say, murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, piracy, arson, robbery, or forgery—"and charged upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the law of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offence had there been committed," may be apprehended, upon complaint made under oath, in order that he may be brought before the judge or justice of the peace who has caused him to be apprehended, to the end that the evidence of his criminality may be heard and considered; "and that if, on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient by law to sustain the charge according to the laws of this province, he shall certify the same, together with a copy of all the testimony taken before him, to the Governor of the province, in order that a warrant may issue, upon the requisition of the proper authorities in the United States, or of any such States, for the surrender of the person charged, according to the stipulation of the treaty." It has been argued on the part of the prisoner, that both of the passages in the statute, in which the sufficiency of the evidence to prove criminality is spoken of, have reference to the law of this province, not merely as regards the nature of the proof that may be received, and its conclusive tendency, but also to the law of this province as regards the particular offence, and in relation to whatever circumstances may have influenced the party in committing the act. I cannot go the whole length of that argument, as it has been endeavoured to apply it in this case. But the construction contended for would seem to exact that there should be a similarity between the law of the State from which the person has fled, and that of our country, in all the features and attributes of the particular crime. To some extent it might be reasonable to hold that the law of the two countries should be found to correspond. For example, if it were the law of Missouri that every intentional killing by a slave of his master, however sudden, should be held to be murder, without regard to any circumstances of provocation, or of any necessity of self-defence against mortal or cruel injury, I do not consider that a fugitive slave, who, according to the evidence, could not be found guilty of murder without applying such a principle to the case, could legally be surrendered by the treaty. But I could not go to the length of holding, that because a man could not, in the nature of things, be killed in this province while he was pursuing a slave, because there are not, and by law cannot be, any slaves here, therefore a slave who has fled from a slave State into this province cannot be given up to justice because he murdered a man in that State who was at the time attempting to arrest him under the authority of law, in order to take him before a magistrate with a view to his being sent back to his master. It would not be right, I think, to hold that the fugitive should, under such circumstances, not be surrendered, and to hold this without reference to what the positive law of that country might allow, or to the conduct of the party pursuing or of the party pursued, or to the knowledge of the latter that the purpose for which it was desired to arrest him was not contrary to the law of the country, or to the fact (if it should be so) that there was no apparent necessity to inflict death in order to escape. It is true, it is not proved that the prisoner, if he was attempting to escape from slavery altogether, or only from the immediate control of his master, was in either case committing any criminal offence against the law of Missouri; nor is it shown that the law of that State made it the duty of Digges to apprehend him under the circumstances in which he was found; but Digges having, as it appears, authority to take him up and carry him before a magistrate, under the general law of the State, it cannot be said that he was acting illegally at the time that Anderson rushed upon him and repeatedly stabbed him with a deadly weapon. He was acting under a legal authority as much as if he had been armed with process, the fact being proved, and not denied, that the statute law of Missouri applied to the prisoner under the circumstances in which he was; and unless Digges abused his authority, by using a degree of violence uncalled for by the circumstances, the killing of him was not justifiable; nor can it be said, I think, that the facts of the case lead plainly to the conclusion that the act of the prisoner Anderson should be held to be nothing more than manslaughter. Upon his trial on a charge of murder, if he shall be surrendered, and if he shall be tried for that offence, it will be for the jury to dispose of the case, under the direction of a judge. There may then appear sufficient reasons to warrant the jury in taking a favourable view of the case, and to lead them to think it probable that the prisoner advanced towards the deceased and stabbed him under an apprehension that it was necessary, not merely to facilitate his own escape, but to save his life, or to avert threatened violence at the moment. But the case, in my judgment, is not one in which the justices at Brantford would have been warranted in assuming the functions of a jury, and intercepting a trial for the graver offence. We may be told that there is no assurance that the prisoner, being a slave, will be tried fairly and without prejudice in the foreign country; but no court or magistrate can refuse to give effect to an act of Parliament by acting on such an assumption; nor can we be influenced by the consideration (a very painful one in all such cases) that the prisoner, even if he shall be wholly acquitted of the offence imputed to him, must still remain a slave in a foreign country.

McLEAN, J., then delivered a long and able judgment. He said—There is nothing before us to show that the justices of the peace who have "examined the evidence," or rather the justice of the peace who certifies the evidence as having been taken before him, has come to any determination that it is "sufficient to sustain the charge, according to the laws of this province, if the alleged offence has been committed therein," or that he has certified his decision on the evidence, together with a copy of all such evidence, to the Governor. By this commitment the prisoner is not "in custody awaiting a surrender under the treaty with the United States," but is in gaol awaiting a discharge according to law. Then, as to the designation of the offence with which it is alleged the prisoner was charged on the 28th September last, it is stated that he was on that day charged, on the oath of William C. Baker and others, without stating who those others were, for that he did, in Howard county, in the State of Missouri, on the 28th September, 1863, wilfully, and maliciously, and ferociously stab and kill one Seneca T. P. Digges. There is no charge of murder in the offence alleged against Anderson by William C. Baker, and we cannot assume that it was intended to prefer a charge for murder; for, in truth, the deposition made by Baker before the justice of the peace, which is returned with the evidence, contains no charge whatever against the prisoner. He expressly says, in his deposition, that he did not see the wound made of which Digges is said to have died, and that he came to this province, employed and paid by the county of Howard, for the purpose of identifying the prisoner. He does not pretend to give any statement of his own, or to make any charge against the prisoner. All he does say, as to the cause of the death of Digges, he says "Digges told him;" so that, in truth, the greater portion of what his deposition contains is a detailed statement of his several conversations with Digges. That statement, in the absence of any proof that it was made by Digges in the full belief that his life was drawing speedily to a close, ought not to have been received, and cannot be considered as legal evidence; so that, without the necessary requisites to confer that character on the hearsay statements of Baker, they cannot possibly form the foundation of a criminal charge against the prisoner. Then there is the testimony of Benjamin F. Digges, a son of Seneca T. P. Digges, who was with his father at the time he was stabbed, and who at that time was a little better than eight years of age. This witness says, very candidly, that he had never seen the coloured man who stabbed his father before that time; that the prisoner was about the colour and size of the man, but "he would not swear he was the man." Looking, then, at all the testimony taken before the justice of the peace, and rejecting such portion as is wholly unnecessary and inadmissible, there is not a witness who connects the prisoner with the stabbing of Digges, unless it be Thomas L. Digges, in his statement of the death-bed declarations of his father to him, and these only shew that the negro by whom Digges was stabbed made certain declarations as to himself and his identity which would be true if made by the prisoner. On the grounds, therefore, that the prisoner was arrested in the first instance on an insufficient complaint, and that he is now detained in custody on a warrant of commitment, until discharged by due course of law, for an offence committed in a foreign country, and on the further grounds that the offence stated in the warrant of commitment is not one for which the prisoner is liable to be detained under the Provincial Act for carrying out the treaty with the United States for the surrender of certain fugitive criminals, and that the evidence, as given before the justice of the peace, is of too vague a character to establish the offence of murder against the prisoner according to the laws of this province, I am of opinion that the prisoner is now entitled to be discharged from custody.—In conclusion, the learned judge said, the law of England, or rather of the British Empire, not only does not recognise slavery within the dominions of the Crown, but imposes upon any British subject who shall have become the owner of slaves in a foreign State the severest penalties, and declares that all persons engaged in carrying on the slave trade, when captured at sea, shall be liable to be treated as pirates. The prisoner Anderson, as appears by the statement of Baker, who came to this province to identify him, has felt the horrors of such treatment. He was brought up to manhood by one Moses Burton, and married a slave on a neighbouring property, by whom he had one child. His master, for his own purposes, disregarding the relation which had been formed, sold and transferred him to a person at a distance, to whose will he was forced to submit. The laws of Missouri, enacted by their white oppressors, while they perpetuate slavery, confer no rights on the slaves, unless it be the bare protection of their lives. Can it, then, be a matter of surprise that the prisoner should endeavour to escape from so degrading a position? or rather, would it not be a cause of surprise if the attempt were not made? Digges, though he could have had no other interest in it but that which binds slaveholders for their common interest to prevent the escape of their slaves, interfered to prevent the prisoner getting beyond the bounds of his bondage, and with his slaves pursued and hunted him, with a spirit and determination which might well drive him to desperation; and when at length the prisoner appeared within reach of capture, he, with a stick in his hand, crossed over a fence and advanced to intercept and seize him. The prisoner was anxious to escape, and, in order to do so, made every effort to avoid his pursuers. Digges, as their leader, on the contrary, was most anxious to overtake and come in contact with the prisoner, for the unholy purpose of rivetting his chains more securely. Could it be expected from any man indulging the desire to be free, which nature has implanted in his breast, that he should quietly submit to be returned to bondage and to stripes, if by any effort of his strength, or any means within his reach, he could emancipate himself? Such an expectation, it appears to me, would be most unreasonable; and I must say, in my judgment, the prisoner was justified in using any necessary degree of force to prevent what to him must inevitably have proved a most fearful evil. He was committing no crime in endeavouring to escape, and to better his own condition; and the fact of his being a slave cannot, in my humble judgment, make that a crime which would not be so if he were a white man. If in this country any number of persons were to pursue a coloured man with the avowed determination to return him into slavery, it cannot, I think, be doubted that the man pursued would be justified in using, in the same circumstances as the prisoner, the same means of relieving himself from so dreadful a result. Can, then, or must, the law of slavery in Missouri be recognised by us to such an extent as to make it murder in Missouri, while it is justifiable in this province to do precisely the same act? I confess that I feel it too repugnant to every sense of religion and every feeling of justice to recognise a rule, designated as a law, passed by the strong for enslaving and tyrannising over the weak—a law which would not be tolerated a moment if those who are reduced to the condition of slaves, and deprived of all human rights, were possessed of white instead of black or dark complexion. The Declaration of Independence of the present United States proclaimed to the world that all men are born equal, and possessed of certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; but the first of these is the only one accorded to the unfortunate slaves; the others of these inalienable rights are denied, because the white population have found themselves strong enough to deprive the blacks of them. A love of liberty is inherent in the human breast, whatever may be the complexion of the skin. "Its taste is grateful, and ever will be so, till nature herself shall change;" and in administering the laws of a British province I never can feel bound to recognise as law any enactment which can convert into chattels a very large number of the human race. I think that on every ground the prisoner is entitled to be discharged.

BURNS, J., concurred in the opinion of the Chief Justice.

Mr. S. B. Freeman, for the prisoner, said it was of course the intention of the prisoner's counsel to appeal the case to the Court of Error and Appeal.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 19, 1861.

In our last number<sup>o</sup> will be found the report, taken from The Toronto Globe, of what is called "the Canada Extradition case," decided by the Court of Queen's Bench in Canada, relative to the case of a man of colour named Anderson, who was claimed by the Government of the United States, under the Extradition Treaty, as a fugitive who had committed murder in the Slave State of Missouri. The judgment was not, however, unanimous—the decision that the fugitive should be given up being that of two judges against one; and it was understood that an appeal from that decision would be brought to a superior tribunal in Canada, and from thence, if necessary, to the Privy Council here. The questions raised by that decision are of the deepest importance, whether viewed in an international, legal, or political light, and we had proposed on an early occasion to bring the subject before our readers. But it has now become complicated with another question of perhaps equal importance and difficulty. The Anti-Slavery Society in England, observing the obvious bearing of the case on the subject of slavery, instructed counsel to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench here for a habeas corpus to bring up the fugitive. This was accordingly done on Tuesday last, the 15th instant, and the writ was granted. Under all the circumstances, we consider that the best service we can render our readers in this matter is to abstain at present from comment, and present them with the following report of the application, which is the fullest we have been able to obtain on so short a notice. The statement of the facts and the argument are taken from The Times of Wednesday, the 16th instant, and the judgment has been supplied to us by our reporter in the Queen's Bench, G. J. P. Smith, Esq.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

HILARY TERM.

[Before COCKBURN, C. J., and CROMPTON, HILL, and BLACKBURN, JJ.]

Ex parte ANDERSON.—Jan. 15.

Edwin James, Q. C., (with whom were Flood and G. Allan), moved for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Governor of the Province of Canada, to the sheriff of Toronto, and the keeper of the gaol there, to bring up the body of one John Anderson, together with the cause of his detention.

COCKBURN, C. J., asked why the name of the Governor was introduced.

Edwin James said the reason was, because in The St. Helena case, to which he should have to refer, the name of the Governor was introduced, as well as that of the keeper of the gaol. The affidavit on which the learned counsel moved was made by L. A. Chamerovzow, of No. 27, New Broad-street, in the city of London, secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. He stated that John Anderson, of the city of Toronto, in her Majesty's province of Canada, a British subject domiciled there, was, as he verily believed, illegally detained in the criminal gaol of the said city there against his will, not having been legally accused or charged with, or legally tried or sentenced for, the commission of any crime, or for any offence against or recognised by the laws in force in the said province, or in any other part of her Majesty's dominions, or not being otherwise liable to be imprisoned or detained under or by virtue of any such laws. The affidavit further stated, that the deponent verily believed that unless a peremptory writ of habeas corpus should immediately issue by this Honourable Court, the life of the said John Anderson would be exposed to the greatest and to immediate danger. The learned counsel proceeded to observe, that, in moving for this writ of habeas corpus, the persons for whom he appeared would have to satisfy the Court that they had jurisdiction to issue this writ to the province of Canada; and, if he established that proposition, their Lordships would have no doubt that, under the pressing circumstances of the case, the writ ought to be directed to issue. The proposition for which he should contend was, that the Crown had power to issue the writ of habeas corpus into any part of her Majesty's possessions. Canada was a part of the possessions of the British Crown, and, in the language which had been adopted in these cases, her Majesty had a right to have an account of the imprisonment of all her subjects in all her dominions. He contended that the Court had as much right to issue this prerogative writ into Canada, as a possession of the British Crown, as into the Isle of Wight or Yorkshire. These writs have gone to Calais when a possession of the British Crown, and also to Ireland, and he should contend that Canada stood in precisely the same position, as a possession of the British Crown. Canada, which was a part of the continent of America, was colonised in the reign of James I, and the first charter was granted in the thirteenth year of the reign of James I. At that time (and the expression was material) the whole of that portion of America was called "the Plantations," and the Board of Trade was called "the Board of Trade and Plantations." Canada belonged to the British Crown till the year 1633, when it was ceded to France; and it was held by the Crown of France till the year 1759, when it was retaken, and ceded to the British Crown. The stat. 14 Geo. 3, c. 83, treated Canada as a colony in the possession of England.

COCKBURN, C. J., said that in the Lower Province of Canada the French law prevailed; but Toronto was an English colony in Upper Canada.

HILL, J., said the 8th section of stat. 14 Geo. 3, c. 83, reserved civil matters for the old law; but by the 11th section the criminal law of England prevailed through the whole of Canada.

Edwin James read an extract from the judgment delivered by Lord Denman in the case of the Canadian prisoners (9 Ad. & El. 782), where Lord Denman said—"The difficult questions that may arise touching the enforcement in England of foreign laws are excluded from this case entirely; for Upper Canada is neither a foreign State, nor a colony with any peculiar customs. Here are no 'mala prohibita' by virtue of arbitrary enactments; the relation of master and slave is not recognised as legal; but acts of Parliament have declared that the law of England, and none other, shall there prevail." By the 11th section of stat. 14 Geo. 3, c. 83, the criminal law of England was in force through the whole of Canada; and, beyond all question, a British subject in Canada was within a portion of her Majesty's dominions. The learned counsel contended that it was matter of right, and clear law, that as soon as a country became a portion of her Majesty's dominions, more especially if, like Canada, it became so by conquest or cession, the writ of habeas corpus issued into it, upon the ground that her Majesty had a right to know what had become of every one of her subjects. No instance could be found of the writ going into Canada, and therefore it was necessary to rely upon the argument by way of analogy, which empowered the Court to issue the writ. "That the writ lies, and runs into every part of her Majesty's dominions, was laid down in Bac. Ab., tit. "Habeas Corpus," B., in these terms:—"2. To what places it may be granted. It hath been already observed that the writ of habeas corpus is a prerogative writ, and that therefore, by the common law, it lies to any part of the king's dominions; for the king ought to have an account why any of his subjects are imprisoned; and therefore no answer will satisfy the writ, but to return the cause with paratum habeo corpus, &c. Hence it was holden that the writ lay to Calais at the time it was subject to the King of England." He then referred to Cowie's case (3 Burr. 834), where Lord Mansfield said, "Writs not ministerially directed (sometimes called prerogative writs, because they are supposed to issue on the part of the king), such as writs of mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, are restricted by no clause in the constitution given to Berwick; upon a proper case they may issue to every dominion of the Crown of England. There is no doubt of the power of this Court where the place is under the subjection of the Crown of England; the only question is as to the propriety. To foreign dominions which belong to a prince who succeeds to the throne of England this Court has no power to send any writ of any kind. We cannot send a habeas corpus to Scotland or to the Electorate; but to Ireland, the Isle of Man, the Plantations, and (as, since the loss of the duchy of Normandy, they have been considered as annexed to the Crown in some respects) to Guernsey and Jersey we may; and formerly it lay to Calais, which was a conquest, and yielded to the Crown of England by the treaty of Bretigny."

Edwin James said that, by the industry of his junior, Mr. Flood, he had copies of the writs which had been issued to Calais in 1387 and 1389. They might be seen in Rymer's Fœdera, p. 15. In 1389 such a writ was issued by the House of Lords, sitting as a court of justice. He relied strongly on the authority of Lord Mansfield, who said that the writ would issue to "every dominion of the Crown of England," and that this Court could send the writ to Ireland, to the Isle of Man, and to the Plantations. He also referred to Vattel's Law of Nations, b. 1, c. 18, p. 210, as an authority for the position, that where a nation took possession of a distant country, and settled in it, it became a part of the parent State; and to Grotius de Jure Belli ac Pacis, b. 2, c. 9, to the same effect. He also referred to 2 P. Wms., 65, 74, where it was said:—"Memorandum, Aug. 9, 1722.—It was said by the Master of the Rolls to have been determined by the Lords of the Privy Council, upon the appeal to the King in Council from the foreign Plantations, 'That if there be a new and uninhabited country found out by British subjects, as the law is the birth-right of every subject, so wherever they go they carry their laws with them, and therefore such new found country is to be governed by the laws of England.'" He then referred to the case of Reg. v. Crawford (13 Q. B. 613), which was an application for a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum to the Isle of Man, and in which it was held that the writ would run into that island since the stat. 5 Geo. 3, by which the island was vested in the Crown, and formed part of its dominions. He also cited the case of Campbell v. Hall (Cowp. 204).

CROMPTON, J., thought the question was, whether the Courts in Westminster Hall had now a concurrent jurisdiction with the local courts in granting this writ.

COCKBURN, C. J., said that, in The Berwick case, Berwick was not subject to the law of Scotland, and therefore there was no superior court which could send a habeas corpus to prevent an illegal imprisonment, unless this Court took upon itself jurisdiction. But was that the case in Canada?

Edwin James said he did not dispute that Canada had both legislative and criminal jurisdiction; but his argument was, that the Courts in England had a concurrent jurisdiction with the Courts in Canada.

The present was not the case of a man who had been tried in Canada, or who was under the sentence of a court which had power to sentence him, for the affidavit shewed that he had never been tried; and he contended that the mere institution of a local jurisdiction would not oust the Queen of the right which she had to ascertain whether any of her subjects were illegally imprisoned. In the case of the Isle of Man there were local courts which had the power to issue writs of habeas corpus; and so also in The St. Helena case (Ex parte Lees, El., Bl., & El. 28). In this latter case a writ of habeas corpus had been very recently granted, after a writ of error had issued.

CROMPTON, J., said he issued the writ as ancillary to the writ of error.

Edwin James said, that if this Court refused a writ of habeas corpus, the party had a right to go in succession to each of the superior courts; and if this Court should refuse their writ, he would have a right to go to every court in Westminster Hall. He thought that was a strong argument to shew that this Court had a concurrent jurisdiction with the Canadian Courts.

COCKBURN, C. J., said the question was, whether it was within the ambit of this Court's jurisdiction, or whether the power of granting the writ was not vested by the Crown in another jurisdiction.

Edwin James contended that the mere establishment of such a jurisdiction in a local court could not limit the rights of the Crown without the authority of an act of Parliament.

COCKBURN, C. J., said that by the conquest or cession of Canada the law of England attached, and this Court had the power to issue writs of habeas corpus into that country, unless the Crown had either expressly or by implication taken away that power. The question was, whether, by the establishment of a local judicature, and committing to it the duty of protecting the subject by issuing writs of habeas corpus, the Crown had not, by implication, taken away the jurisdiction of this Court.

CROMPTON, J., said the Legislature might do that.

Edwin James said it was open to a party in this country to apply for the writ of habeas corpus to any court of co-ordinate jurisdiction.

HILL, J.—And also for a prohibition.

Edwin James contended that it was a common-law right of the subject to go to every tribunal for this writ; and, a fortiori, the courts in this country would have a concurrent jurisdiction with the colonial courts, unless it was taken away by an act of Parliament.

COCKBURN, C. J., asked whether the right to go to every one of the courts had not arisen from the Habeas Corpus Act.

Edwin James contended it was by the common law, and all this Court was asked to do was, not to interfere with any judgment, but to grant a habeas corpus to liberate a man who was in illegal custody. He was not in custody under the commitment of any local court which had the power to try him; there was no judgment to set aside, but it was shewn to the Court that he was detained for no crime cognisable by the law of England. The learned counsel then referred to Corpus Wilson's case (7 Q. B. 984), in which the writ had issued into the Isle of Jersey, and then proceeded to argue that the case might arise when the courts in Canada might be unable to discharge their duties, as a reason why this Court should still retain the power of granting these writs.

COCKBURN, C. J., inquired, supposing the writ should go, what means had the Court of enforcing it?

Edwin James said the Court could enforce the writ by attachment; but it could not be assumed that the Queen's writ would not be obeyed. The Court would send its own officer to execute the writ. An application had been made to the local court for a writ of habeas corpus, and refused; and it was now shewn to this Court that John Anderson, a British subject, was illegally detained in prison, having been guilty of no crime cognisable by the law of England. There were precedents for this application, and he confidently submitted that the mere fact that there were other courts which had a concurrent jurisdiction would not deprive the applicant of that protection for which he now prayed the Court.

The learned counsel then handed in the affidavit upon which he moved, and which was in these terms:—

“IN THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

“The affidavit of Louis Alexis Chamerovzow, of No. 27, New Broad-street, in the city of London, secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society.

“I say, 1. That John Anderson, of the city of Toronto, in her Majesty's province of Canada, a British subject domiciled there, now is, as I verily believe, illegally detained in the criminal gaol of the said city there against his will, not having been legally accused or charged with, or legally tried or sentenced for, the commission of any crime, or for any offence against or recognised by the laws in force in the said province, or in any other part of her Majesty's dominions, or not being otherwise liable to be imprisoned or detained under or by virtue of any such laws.

“2. I verily believe, that unless a peremptory writ of habeas corpus shall immediately issue by this Honourable Court, the life of the said John Anderson is exposed to the greatest and to immediate danger.”

Their Lordships then retired to consider their decision. After a short absence their Lordships returned.

COCKBURN, C. J.—We have carefully considered this matter, and the result of our anxious deliberation is, that we think that the writ ought to issue. We are sensible of the inconvenience which may result from the exercise of such a jurisdiction. We are also sensible that it may be thought to be inconsistent with that higher degree of colonial independence, both in legislation and judicature, which has been carried into effect in modern times with happy results. At the same time, in establishing local legislation and judicial authority, the Legislature of Great Britain has not gone so far as expressly to abrogate any jurisdiction which the Courts in Westminster Hall possess, of issuing writs of habeas corpus to any part of her Majesty's dominions. And we find that that jurisdiction in these courts has been asserted from the earliest times, and exercised down to the most recent. We have it upon the authority of Lord Coke, Lord Mansfield, Blackstone, and Bacon's Abridgment, that these writs of habeas corpus have been, and are to be, issued into all the dominions of the Crown of England when it is suggested that one of the Queen's subjects is illegally imprisoned. And not only have we these authorities in the shape of dicta of eminent judges and assertions of text-writers, but we have the practical application of the doctrine in cases in very modern times. The more remarkable instances are where the writ was issued to the islands of Jersey, Man, and St. Helena. Finding, upon these authorities, that the power has been not only asserted, but carried into execution as matter of practice, even where an independent local legislature and judicature were established, we think that nothing short of a legislative enactment, expressly depriving us of this jurisdiction, will warrant us in withholding the exercise of it when called upon to do so for the protection of the liberty of the subject. It may be that the Legislature has thought fit to leave a concurrent jurisdiction to be exercised in the courts of this country and in the colonial courts, as there is in this court and the other courts of Westminster Hall. We can only act on the authorities, and we feel that we should not be doing right, under the authority of the precedents cited, if we refused to issue this writ.—Habeas corpus granted.

CONDITION OF SALE.—OUTSTANDING LEGAL ESTATE.

A VENDOR who stipulates that the purchaser shall bear all the expenses of and incident to the getting in of the legal estate, if it be outstanding, is not thereby exonerated from the obligation to abstract and prove the title to the legal estate. To protect himself from being called upon to do that, he must further stipulate that he shall only be required to shew an equitable title. We notice the case of The Official Manager of the Sheerness Well or Waterworks Company v. Polson (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 12) in order to correct a misconception on this point which might easily occur upon a hasty perusal of the report. In that case the company, which was a mere voluntary unincorporated association formed in 1800, had in 1829 taken a conveyance of the legal estate in land to the shareholders in fee-simple, as tenants in common, in shares proportionate to their shares in the capital. The company being wound up, the official manager put up the land for sale under conditions, including a condition to the effect, in substance, that the vendor should deliver an abstract of title, commencing with the conveyance of 1829, and an abstract of the several documents affecting the several shares into which the company was divided, but the purchaser should nevertheless accept a conveyance from the official manager without requiring the concurrence of the shareholders or any other persons for any purpose whatsoever. The condition then proceeded in these words:—"If the purchaser shall consider the legal estate in the whole or any part of the property to be outstanding, and shall require a conveyance thereof, he shall bear the expenses of obtaining all such conveyance or conveyances as he may require, and all other expenses incidental to the getting in of such legal estate, and in all proceedings relative thereto." The purchaser having declined to complete until the vendor had shewn a title to the legal estate, and procured a conveyance thereof, the Master of the Rolls held, "that the purchaser was bound to complete on the execution of the conveyance by the official manager alone, the official manager being bound to procure" (but not, it seems, as a condition precedent to the payment of the purchase money), "at the expense of the purchaser, such a conveyance of the legal estate as the purchaser might require, and the vendor be able to obtain." The Master of the Rolls considered that under the contract it was for the purchaser to trace the legal title, and to say, "I require conveyances from such and such persons." That conclusion was derived from the first clause of the condition, that the concurrence of the shareholders was not to be required for any purpose. We confess that the condition does not appear to us to support the decision. The stipulation, that the concurrence of the shareholders should not be required for any purpose, could not be understood as extending to the purpose of conveying the legal estate, when it was immediately followed by a representation to the purchaser that he might have a conveyance of the legal estate on paying for it. Indeed, if the condition against requiring the concurrence of the shareholders had stood alone, we conceive that it ought to have been held fraudulent and void for not stating that the legal estate was in them. However this may be, the decision is clearly no authority for excusing a vendor from shewing a title to the legal estate and procuring a conveyance of it, merely on the ground that he has by the contract thrown the expense of getting in the legal estate on the purchaser.

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Liens of Attornies, Solicitors, and other Legal Practitioners. By WHITLEY STOKES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. (12mo., pp. 264).

THE list of the cases cited in this volume, exceeding 600 in number, is enough to shew that a work specially devoted to the subject of professional lien was needed. The want appears to have been completely supplied by Mr. Stokes, who, like one of those machines frequently produced in scientific lectures, has at once exhausted the subject, and condensed into very small compass the matter contained in it. We have noted up the English authorities on the subject with some care, and can testify to the completeness of the author's research in that direction; and we have no doubt that he has also extracted all that is to be found in the Irish reports.

In an introduction the divisions of the subject are thus explained and defined:—

"Two kinds of lien (ligamen) are known to English law.

"The first is a right to retain possession of another's property until a debt due to the person retaining has been satisfied.

"The second is a right to charge property in another's possession with the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty. The first kind of lien may be called a retaining lien, and the second a charging lien."

Then, after explaining the distinction between a particular and a general lien, we are told that

"Attornies and solicitors practising in the courts of justice in England and Ireland may have not only the retaining lien, but the charging lien.

"Their retaining lien is both particular and general; their charging lien is only particular. The former is passive, the latter active; the former is defeasible, the latter absolute. The subject-matter of the former is a chose in possession; that of the latter almost always a chose in action.

"These liens accordingly require separate consideration, and this treatise falls into two principal parts. The first treats of the retaining lien of attornies and solicitors; the second, of their charging lien; and in dealing with each of these liens the following subdivisions naturally suggest themselves:—

"1. The subject-matter of the lien.

"2. The person enforcing it.

"3. The person against whom it is enforced.

"4. Its extent.

"5. The mode of enforcing it.

"6. The time of enforcing it; and,

"7. The means by which it may be resisted or displaced.

"We shall then consider the peculiarities of the lien of the town agent of a country solicitor; and, lastly, we shall notice the analogous liens which have been maintained or sought to be enforced by proctors, certificated conveyancers, and other legal practitioners."

Having allowed our author to set forth the plan on which he has worked, we shall extract a specimen brick or two from the structure.

The question, whether a solicitor can detain his client's will until his costs are paid, is thus discussed by Mr. Stokes:—

"It has been distinctly laid down by Lord Eldon that a solicitor can have no lien on the original will of his client. (Balch v. Symes, Turn. & R. 93). Various reasons have been given for this alleged exception to the general rule that a solicitor's lien comprises all his client's papers in his possession. None of them appear satisfactory. 1. That the lien should not apply to a will, as such instrument involves many different interests. But it may or may not involve many different interests; and if it does, so do many instruments on which the solicitor's lien is unquestionable. 2. That the will may refer to personal as well as real estate; and if it does, the solicitor would be compelled, by citation, to produce it in the ecclesiastical court. True; this production, resulting as it does in a deposit of the original in the registry of the ordinary or metropolitan, cannot be enforced without prejudice to the lien; but the present reason does not touch the case when the will clearly relates to land only, and therefore ought not to be proved. 3. That the lien, if allowed, might enable the solicitor to defeat the executor's right to retain his own debt. But this right of retainer is only against debts of an equal degree; and even if the executor were a special creditor of the deceased, the solicitor of the latter would have a right to be paid out of a fund recovered before the executor could retain. The solicitor would, moreover, have a lien on such fund. Why, then, should he not have a lien on the testator's will? 4. That the solicitor cannot refuse the production for the purposes of establishing the character of all persons claiming under the instrument. But this, if true, would be answered by the observation that the will might be produced without destroying the lien. 5. That the existence of a lien on the will might prejudice the right of the testator to alter it, even in articulo mortis. Without here making the verbal criticism, that, strictly speaking, there can be no such thing as an altered will, one may remark that this reason does not apply when the time for making such alteration has expired—i. e. after the testator's death, and as against his devisee or personal representatives. 6. That the solicitor engages to make an instrument effectual for the purposes of the testator, which it cannot be unless produced elsewhere. But this, of course, only applies to a case in which the solicitor has drawn the will for his client; and even then, as before observed, liability to production does not negative a right to lien. And, lastly, the case of a will respecting realty only could not have been in Lord Eldon's mind when he used this argument.

"On the whole, the proposition that a solicitor may, as against the devisee of his client, maintain a lien on a will relating solely to real estate, does not seem opposed to principle, and should not, it is submitted, be rejected merely on the ground of Lord Eldon's broad dictum in Balch v. Symes.

"We have observed that the ecclesiastical court would compel a solicitor, claiming a lien on a will relating to personality, to bring it in for purposes of probate. In Ex parte Law the Court of King's Bench discharged a rule which had been obtained to shew cause why a writ, in the nature of a writ of prohibition, should not issue to a judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, commanding him to stay all proceedings against an attorney until his lien on a testator's will should have been satisfied or discharged. The spiritual court had, at all events, jurisdiction to order the will to be brought in, and the Court of King's Bench would not assume that the Prerogative Court was going to act in derogation of the course of common law, by trying the right of lien.

"Nor, when the attorney is monished to bring in the will, can he be allowed to dispute the jurisdiction, and put the other party to proof of bona notabilia, prior to giving up the will. (Brown v. Coates, 1 Add. 345).

"The rule against a solicitor's lien on a will would extend not only to a duplicate, but to all his client's other testamentary papers; for the Prerogative Court may order them all to be brought in when required."

Mr. Stokes's criticism on another case does not appear to us to be sound. He is treating of the defence, "that the solicitor was not authorised to receive the subject-matter." (P. 60).

"Another case in which this defence might have been used was suggested, but unfortunately was not decided, in Vaughan v. Vanderstegen (2 Drew. 409). There a married woman had a life estate in realty to her separate use, without power of anticipation; she had a general power of appointment by will only, and in default of appointment, remainder to her in fee; how far could she, by handing the title deeds to her solicitor, give a lien thereon, first, against herself; secondly, against her heirs? It was asked, in reply to the solicitor's counsel, could the right by lien attach on deeds by the act of a party who has no present authority to part with them? and asserted that the married woman could not part with the deeds in respect of her life estate, which she could not charge. It may be answered, that no doubt the married woman, in the case supposed, had no authority to part with the deeds with a view of thereby creating an equitable mortgage of her life estate. But a solicitor's lien is not a mortgage: it involves no possible parting with, or charge upon, the estate. Nay, it might even have been said, in the case in question, that its existence was in harmony with the views of the settlor, as it tended to render the life estate inalienable. The proposition that the married woman could not part with the mere possession of her deeds—which is all that is required to create a solicitor's lien—is obviously untenable. Equally so is the assumption that the parting with the deeds must necessarily be by way of charging her life estate. As to her appointee by will, or heir, she could, I presume, have created, as against them, a lien on the remainder in fee, and, a fortiori, on the deeds relating to such remainder."

We think that this criticism may be answered by referring to the author's own sound exposition of the nature of a retaining lien—that it is "a right to retain possession of another's property until a debt due to the person retaining has been satisfied." (P. 1). Again: "General retaining liens depend on the agreement of the parties." In Vaughan v. Vanderstegen the married woman had not contracted a personal debt, and she had no property in the estate or in the deeds which she could charge by agreement, or otherwise than by an acknowledged deed. She had an inalienable life estate in the realty, and in the title deeds as appurtenant to it; she had a remainder in fee, which she could not charge otherwise than by an acknowledged deed; and she had a power of appointment, which could only be exercised by a testamentary act, and which, in an earlier stage of the same case (reported 2 Drew. 165), was expressly held not to support a charge inter vivos.

The above is the only questionable passage we have found in the book, which may be recommended as being evidently the work of a well-educated lawyer, who has brought to the preparation of it a more general familiarity with common law details than is usually possessed by equity barristers—the faculty of logical arrangement and lucid exposition, great industry, and, as we learn from the Preface, an approving conscience.

THE COMMON-LAW COURTS AND THE DIVORCE COURT.

(From The Observer).

THERE seems, from some cause or other, a great dislike on the part of the Legislature to appoint new judges. It was only when the arrears in the different common-law courts became so great as to amount almost to a denial of justice that by degrees additional judges were appointed. The Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and the Court of Exchequer have each now five judges, and with this addition they are obliged to leave remanets, amounting on the average, with new causes, to sixty each, for the new term, though the judges work indefatigably. From the end of the Long Vacation to its commencement in the following year, with the exception of one or two days at Christmas and the same at Easter, the judges sit almost every day, either in London or on circuit. They are considered generally to be well paid, but there are few men who work so hard for their salaries as the judges. Counsel of high standing and eminent repute may for the time being work for a greater number of hours, but they not only have less responsibility, but frequently have larger incomes. It must not be supposed that when a judge leaves his court his business is at an end; he has to ponder over his notes, to weigh the law of the question, and to be prepared, when he is called upon to give judgment, to have that judgment thoroughly scanned by the whole Profession. Ten years' work as a judge makes him an old man. There are some exceptions, but this term may fairly be taken as an average. The position of a judge is naturally a high one, and counsel strive for it, believing that that position once attained will eventually lead them to the woolstack. Nevertheless, the honour and the emoluments may be too dearly bought. It is, therefore, the duty of the Legislature to see that too much work is not thrown upon any man's shoulders. From the lists of court papers put forth by the three different common-law courts it appears that the total number of cases to be tried amounts to about 190. The Divorce Court has, according to the printed list, 188 cases for dissolution and nullity of marriage, and some ten cases for judicial separation. The 190 common-law cases will be distributed amongst fifteen judges; the 198 cases in the Divorce Court will practically have to be heard before one judge, and this in addition to the various causes that arise out of the Probate Court. Now, on public grounds, is it fair to the judge or to the public that this vast distinction should be made? The present judge of the Divorce Court is admitted to be an able and hard-working man, but the ablest and the strongest man cannot accomplish impossibilities. It is unfair to him that this enormous amount of business should be thrown upon his shoulders; and it is unjust to the suitors that they should have to suffer all the anxieties consequent upon tedious delays, and increased expense contingent thereon. When a man or woman presents a petition for dissolution of marriage, it is in the confident hope that it will be disposed of quickly. The petitioners may have borne their sorrow and alarm in private for years, and, with the exception of their immediate relatives, no one know anything about them; but when proceedings are commenced everything is made public long before the trial, through the interlocutory proceedings that take place. Take, for instance, the case of a gentleman living in a country town, who for some time past has apparently been living a moral life, although his wife is not resident with him. A few comments are made at first, but these are soon forgotten. At length he makes up his mind to present a petition for dissolution of marriage; his wife answers, and brings counter-charges against him. People who were previously on good terms with the husband stand aloof until he can exonerate his character. From this moment until his case is finally disposed of he becomes the "observed of all observers" in the limited circle of the society in which he moves. Supposing that the petitioner has been maligned by his wife, the delay adds almost tenfold to the misery his wife's previous conduct may have occasioned him. The same thing, of course, applies to the wife. The cruelty occasioned by delay was one of the principal causes for the passing of the Divorce Act. Unless, however, the court be enlarged, by the creation of one or more assistant judges, it is hopeless to expect that the business can be got through in anything like reasonable time. It has been observed before that the Legislature is adverse to augmenting the staff of judges. They passed the Divorce Act on the implied understanding that there would not be probably more than twenty cases a year. When in the first year the number of cases was between two and three hundred, our Legislature, in their wisdom, came to the conclusion that this large number of cases arose out of "old sores." The second year passed, and the number went on increasing rapidly; and from returns made to Parliament it was found that the larger number of "sores" were of very recent date—some since the passing of the act. The third year will very possibly exhibit a similar result. The number of cases will perhaps startle a good many, but after all it is very small in proportion to the population. In round numbers it would not be more than one in 2900 of all the men, women, and children in the United Kingdom. Considering the age of luxury in which we live, and that it has always been found that immorality increases in an increased ratio with luxury, it is not too much to assert that the business of the Court of Divorce will increase instead of diminish. It is clear, therefore, that it will be the duty of the Government early next session to introduce some measure which shall reduce the business of the court, by appointing additional judges, so that cases may now have a chance of being heard as soon, if not sooner, than in courts of law or equity.

PUBLIC PROSECUTORS.

A QUESTION of considerable importance to both branches of the Profession was mooted in the Leeds Town Council on Tuesday last, and we think it well deserves the attention of our readers. Some fourteen years ago the council appointed two gentlemen, who are known as public prosecutors, to conduct all prosecutions arising within the borough of Leeds, although it is very difficult to see whence the council derived power to make such an appointment. Indeed, it may be safely averred that the appointment would have been utterly nugatory had not the borough magistrates combined with the council to render it effectual. This they did by binding over to prosecute, in every case, not the party aggrieved, but some police officer, who it was understood should, as a matter of course, retain one or other of the gentlemen appointed by the council to conduct the prosecution at sessions or assizes. We have no doubt that this system has worked admirably for the interests of the two gentlemen referred to, and that they have every reason to congratulate themselves upon its adoption; but their professional brethren have certainly suffered from it, and it may reasonably be doubted whether the public have in any appreciable degree been benefited.

With regard to the injury inflicted upon the great body of the Leeds attorneys, there can be no question as to its existence, for they have been utterly shut out from the borough prosecutions, even although the parties aggrieved may have been their own clients, and they may have conducted the case before the magistrates up to the committal of the prisoner. At that stage the public prosecutor steps in, and says virtually, "Now that you have got this case up for me, I take it out of your hands; you have done all the drudgery, but I claim the substantial rewards." It really seems, however, unnecessary to enlarge upon this part of the subject, because, when it is an admitted fact that the two appointees of the council have all the borough prosecutions, no one can doubt that the other members of the Profession practising in the town are dammed.

But are the public benefited by this arrangement? It must be observed, that the public prosecutors do nothing in the way of detecting crime, or of sifting the evidence before the magistrates. That is left altogether to the party aggrieved, or his attorney, or to the police; and it is only when the case is ripe for trial that the public prosecutors make their appearance on the stage. The public, therefore, derive no advantage from the services of the public prosecutors in the most important stages of the inquiry in criminal cases. These functionaries neither initiate the proceedings, nor exercise any discretion as to their initiation, and thus they do nothing either to prevent, in the first stage, a failure of justice, or trumpery cases from being committed for trial. Nor is anything saved in the costs of the prosecution, for the public prosecutors receive just the same fees as any other attorney would do; and the very fact that they know that they must be employed in every case has a tendency to make them less vigilant than if the prosecutions were open to the Profession at large—unless, indeed, Leeds human nature is superior to the same article elsewhere.

Cases, moreover, might easily be put where the party aggrieved would feel it a monstrous hardship that the prosecution should be conducted by an entire stranger to himself—as, for example, in the case of forgeries on banks, embasslements by merchants' clerks, and other important crimes, where the real prosecutor would deem it as important to have the advice and assistance of his own attorney as on a purchase or mortgage. Such advice and assistance, however, he cannot have at Leeds, unless he pay for it out of his own pocket, and unless the public prosecutor will allow the interference of another attorney. The official of the town council and the policeman, the nominal prosecutor, have the matter entirely in their own hands, and the unfortunate aggrieved has no control whatever over it.

With regard to the effect of this system upon the Bar, it is at once ludicrous and painful. The public prosecutors, in order to avoid the appearance of partiality, deal out to every barrister who makes his appearance at the Leeds Borough Sessions one or two briefs, with an additional one to those connected with the town, and to those who are of long standing at the Bar. This distribution of briefs is known as "soup," and it obviously has a tendency to lower the tone of the Bar, and to take away an important stimulus to exertion. Every man is sure of his soup, and had he the ability of an Erskine, he would at Leeds get nothing more, at least in the shape of prosecutions. So notorious is it that every counsel coming to the sessions there will get his share of soup briefs, that some half-dozen gentlemen, who never make their appearance elsewhere in the West Riding, find themselves regularly in the robing-room at the Leeds Town Hall on the day of holding the borough sessions in that town.

It is, we think, high time that a system which is at once so unjust to the attorneys, so detrimental to the interests of the public, and so degrading to the Bar, should be abolished.—Solicitors' Journal.

AN ELEMENTARY VIEW of the PROCEED-INGS of an ACTION at LAW. By JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., Author of "Leading Cases," "A Compendium of Mercantile Law," &c. Seventh Edition, adapted to the present Practice. By SAMUEL PRENTICE, Esq., Barrister at Law, Editor of "Chitty's Archbold's Practice." In 12mo. 1860.
 V. & R. Stevens & Sons; H. Sweet; and W. Maxwell, Law Publishers.

GREENWOOD'S MANUAL OF CONVEYANCING.

Second Edition, in 12mo., price 10s. 6d. cloth.

A MANUAL of the PRACTICE of CONVEYANCING, shewing the present Practice relating to the daily routine of Conveyancing in Solicitors' Offices. To which are added, concise Common Forms and Precedents in Conveyancing—Conditions of Sales, Conveyances, and all other Assurances in constant use. By G. W. GREENWOOD. Second Edition, enlarged.

V. &amp; R. Stevens &amp; Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

DANIELL'S CHANCERY PRACTICE. Third Edition, with considerable Alterations, incorporating the Statutes, Orders, and Decisions to the present time. By T. E. HEADLAM, Esq., M.P., one of her Majesty's Counsel. In 2 vols. 8vo., price 2l. 2s. cloth.

V. &amp; R. Stevens &amp; Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

TRIPP'S CHANCERY FORMS AND PRECEDENTS.

In 8vo., price 10s. 6d. cloth.

FORMS AND PRECEDENTS of PROCEEDINGS in the COURT of CHANCERY, with Practical Notes and Observations, including as well those Forms which are in ordinary use, and required by Solicitors in the conduct of a Cause, as also Precedents of Pleadings, Forms of Petitions, Decrees and Orders in Suits, and under the Infants, Settlements, and Settled Estates Acts; the Trustees, the Trustee Relief, and other Acts. With References to the Third Edition of Daniell's Chancery Practice; and an Appendix containing the Regulations of the Judges of the 8th August, 1857. By RICHARD S. TRIPP, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"Much more acceptable, however, is this very complete and comprehensive work, the fruit of Mr. Tripp's experience, judgment, and industry, with official assistance. The explanatory observations and references contain, in a condensed form, much valuable information, ready to hand at the moment it is wanted; and all is made accessible by a good index."—Jurist, Jan. 30, 1858.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 26, 1861.

LORD BACON, when Attorney-General, made a proposition to his Majesty King James I, "touching the compiling and amendment of the laws of England," which, though never as yet carried out, should not, we think, be forgotten.

If that great man had been entrusted by the royal pedant with adequate means, or received from him sufficient encouragement, the noble work which he proposed for himself and his coadjutors—for he said it "must be the work of many"—would have remained a monument by which his name would have been rendered equally illustrious as a jurist as it is as the founder of a school of philosophy.

He saw no insuperable difficulties in the completion of the work; he considered it "safe and convenient;" and whilst he asserted that it was "no vast nor speculative thing, but real and feasible," he was fully impressed with its importance and dignity, and caring, as all really great men do, not for mere temporary applause, power, or popularity, he looked forward to a time when future generations should reap the fruit and acknowledge the value of his labours. "I am in good hope," he says, "that when Sir Edward Coke's reports, and my rules and decisions, shall come to posterity, there will be (whatsoever is now thought) no question who was the greater lawyer."

The work proposed by Bacon consisted of two parts—first, the digest or recompileing of the common law; and, secondly, that of the statutes. Bacon thought, wisely, that "the necessity of the work was greater in the statute law;" the statutes, even in those days, which were in force, being so mixed up with those obsolete and out of date, that he poetically described the former as enduring the torment of Mezentius—"the living died in the arms of the dead." And if this was true in the time of King James I, how much more so is it in the time of Queen Victoria!

Bacon, in his proposition, laid down that the reforming and recompileing of the statute law consists of four parts:—

1. "The first, to discharge the books of those statutes whereof the cause, by alteration of time, is vanished," and of which he gives some examples, and adds, "Those nevertheless may remain in the libraries for antiquities, but no reprinting of them. The like of statutes long since expired and clearly repealed; for if the repeal be doubtful, it must be so propounded to the Parliament."

2. "The next is, to repeal all statutes which are sleeping, and not of use, but yet snaring and in force. In some of those it will, perhaps, be requisite to substitute some more reasonable law instead of them, agreeable to the time; in others a simple repeal may suffice."

3. The third, "that the grievousness of the penalty in many statutes be mitigated, though the ordinances stand."

4. "The last is, the reducing of concurrent statutes, heaped one upon another, to one clear and uniform law."

* See Bacon's Law Tracts, 1.

That part of the proposed work which concerned the statute laws Bacon thought "must of necessity come to Parliament, as the Houses would best like that which themselves guide, and the persons that themselves employ." He then suggests that "the way were to imitate<sup>o</sup> the precedent of the Commissioners for the Canon Laws, in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of Henry VIII, and the fourth year of the reign of Edward VI, and the Commissioners for the Union of the two Realms, primo of his Majesty, and so to have the commissioners named by both Houses, yet not with a precedent power to conclude, but only to propound to Parliament." And "this," he concludes, "is the best way, I conceive, to accomplish this excellent work of honour to your Majesty's times, and of good to all times, which I submit to your Majesty's better judgment."

It appears that the work suggested by Bacon was actually commenced by Lord Hobart, Bacon, Serjeant Finch, Mr. Heneage Finch, Mr. Noye, Mr. Hackwell, and others, and must have made considerable progress, for the result of their labours is stated to have been "of great bulk." Bacon's project, however, failed, because he did not receive that support from the King and Parliament which both the man and the work demanded. The recent attempt by the Statute-law Commissioners failed, notwithstanding it received the support of Parliament and the good wishes of the nation, because there was no Bacon to infuse into it his spirit or to superintend its operations.

We ought not, however, to be discouraged by our recent failure from attempting a work of such great and manifest utility. The present state of our statute law is simply disgraceful, and unworthy of a great country. It is true that some of the evils complained of by Bacon have been partially removed—the "grievousness of the penalties" of our former sanguinary criminal statutes have been mitigated, many "concurrent statutes heaped one upon another" have been consolidated, and many sleeping and obsolete statutes have been repealed; nevertheless the statutes, with their enormous bulk, still remain before us—a chaotic mass, which no one can pretend to master, and which every one who either is engaged in the practice or administration of the law with just reason dreads—dreads lest, in considering any questions of law, some statute may lie hid which his industry may not be able to unearth—dreads lest, if found, it may be conceived in such language as passes the understanding of man to comprehend.

The suggestion of Bacon, that commissioners to undertake the reduction and consolidation of the statute laws should be appointed by the Houses of Parliament, ought, we think, to be attended to, not only on account of the weight which advice falling from so great a man naturally carries with it, but because it is supported both by reason and precedents.

Some one, however, should take the initiative in one of the Houses of Parliament—either the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords, or the Attorney-General in the House of Commons.

Should Lord Campbell attempt, and succeed in accomplishing, so great an undertaking, even though his written judgments may not take rank with those of Lords Hardwicke, Eldon, and Cottenham, he would nevertheless be long remembered as one of the most eminent Chancellors.

Failing the Lord Chancellor, will not the Attorney-General, Sir Richard Bethell, essay the task? It is worthy of the high reputation which he has already deservedly achieved, and will form no mean instalment of those measures of law reform which he has so long and so consistently advocated, and which the country, if not his party, expect from him.

It is true, we believe, that at present some progress is being made in the indexing of the Statute Book by two gentlemen of considerable ability and industry, but from their unassisted efforts we cannot expect much. "The work," to use again the words of Lord Bacon, "must be the work of many."

To any one of adequate abilities and position, putting himself in the position Bacon sought in vain to occupy, the Bar would furnish an abundance of learned and industrious coadjutors, who would be able at no distant period "to prepare and propound to the Houses of Parliament" such a reduction and consolidation of the Statute Book as they might readily, or with slight modifications, adopt, which would realise the sanguine dreams of Lord Bacon, and satisfy the wants of the nation.

This work being accomplished, the other part of Lord Bacon's proposition—the digest or recompiling of the common laws, in which should be now included all branches of jurisprudence as administered by our various Courts, and which depend upon unwritten law or the decisions of judges, as distinguished from written law or acts of Parliament—should be attempted; and if attempted in a proper spirit, and with adequate means, it might be completed in such a manner as to form a lasting benefit to the British Empire and race, and might take its place with, even if not above, the Pandects of Justinian or the Code of the first Napoleon.

RULES OF PRACTICE ON THE REVENUE SIDE OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

IN pursuance of the provisions contained in the 26th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, intituled "An Act to regulate the Office of Queen's Remembrancer, and to amend the Practice and Procedure on the Revenue Side of the Court of Exchequer," it is ordered that the following rules, in respect of the matters hereafter mentioned, shall be in force on the Revenue Side of the Court of Exchequer.

GENERAL RULE AS TO ISSUING WRITS.

1. All writs to be hereafter sued out by the solicitor of any department, or by any attorney, shall be prepared by the solicitor of such department, or by the attorney suing out the same; and the name of such solicitor, or the name and address of such attorney, together with the name of the department, if any, on behalf of which the writ is sued out, shall be indorsed thereon; and every such writ shall, before the issuing thereof, be sealed at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, and a præcipe thereof left at the said office; and thereupon an entry of every such writ, together with the date of sealing, and the name of the solicitor or attorney suing out the same, shall be made in a book, to be kept at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office for that purpose; and all writs, of whatever description, to be hereafter issued from the said Queen's Remembrancer's Office, shall be tested of the day, month, and year when issued; but in case any writ or writs of extent or diem clausit extremum shall issue within twenty-one days from the date of the fiat, the same may bear teste the date of the fiat, provided that this rule is not to affect the right of the Crown applying to the court or a judge for a writ of extent or diem clausit extremum tested the date of the fiat, nor to affect commissions for inclosing waste land in any of the royal forests, process against parishes or collectors under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 20, s. 11, or commissions for taking the bond of a public officer, which may be issued as at present.

* "King Henry VIII, in the twenty-seventh year of his reign, was authorised by Parliament to nominate thirty-two commissioners, part ecclesiastical, part temporal, to purge the canon law, and to make it agreeable to the law of God and the law of the realm; and the same was revived in the fourth year of Edward VI, though neither took effect." (Bacon's Law Tracts, 7).

The proceeding by subpoena ad respondendum may be thus:—

2. The writ of subpoena may be either in Form 1, 2, or 3, Schedule (A.), according to the circumstances, and shall be in force six calendar months from the date thereof; and at any time during six months from the issuing or renewing, as hereinafter mentioned, of the original writ of subpoena, one or more concurrent writ or writs may issue, each concurrent writ to bear teste of the same day as the original writ, and to be sealed and marked "concurrent," and the date of issuing the concurrent writ; and such concurrent writ or writs shall only be in force for the period during which the original writ of subpoena shall be in force; but if any defendant therein named may not have been served therewith, the original or concurrent writ of subpoena may be renewed, at any time before its expiration, for six months from the date of such renewal, and so from time to time during the currency of the renewed writ, by being sealed and marked of the day, month, and year of such renewal; and a writ of subpoena so renewed shall remain in force, and be available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of the suit may be limited, and for all other purposes, from the date of the issuing of the original writ of subpoena.

3. In order to proceed to judgment under the following rules, the service of the writ shall, where practicable, be personal; but the order of a judge may be obtained, under special circumstances, on affidavit, to dispense with personal service, and to proceed as is the practice on the common-law side of the court.

4. The appearance to be in fourteen days from the day of service, inclusive of the day of service.

5. If the defendant does not appear according to the exigency of the writ, judgment may be signed on filing an information, if not previously filed, and an affidavit of service, or the order to proceed; and in all cases where the claim is in respect of a debt, penalty, or liquidated demand in money, execution may issue in fourteen days from the day of signing judgment.

6. If the defendant appears in due time, a copy of the information must be delivered to the defendant, or his attorney in case he appears by attorney, and notice given (either on the information or separately) to plead in fourteen days from the day of service of such notice, otherwise judgment.

7. The defendant may appear at any time before judgment actually signed; but if he does so after the ordinary time for appearance, he or his attorney must in such case forthwith give notice to the solicitor of the department, or the attorney issuing the writ, that he has appeared.

8. If the defendant appears after the time for appearance, and before information filed, a copy of the information is to be delivered, with notice to plead as before mentioned; and if the defendant appears after the information has been filed, and before judgment signed, notice is to be given to him or to his attorney, at the office of the Queen's Remembrancer, of the day when the information was filed, and he may obtain an office copy thereof on payment for the same; and he must plead thereto within four days from the date of his appearance, otherwise judgment may be signed against him.

9. When a defendant appears in person, the delivery of all rules, notices, and other proceedings may be made at the address given by him on entering his appearance.

THE CANADA EXTRADITION CASE.

THIS matter continues to occupy a considerable share of the public attention. Many letters on the subject have been addressed to the public journals, of which we select the following:—

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—In a case of such vast importance in its consequences as that of the fugitive slave Anderson, I trust you will allow me to occupy a small portion of your columns, in order to point out to your readers the circumstances under which the British Legislature ratified by act of Parliament the treaty under which the surrender of Anderson was claimed.

On the second reading of the bill in the House of Commons, on the 11th August, 1843, Sir F. Pollock, the Attorney-General of the day, explained the objects of the bill. He was followed by the late Lord Macaulay, who, in the course of his speech, made the following remarks: he said—

"Take the case of a slave who had committed murder in his own defence. Suppose a man scourged him, pursued him. The slave had surely the right to resist, and, in his defence, to kill his assailant. By the law of England that would be justifiable homicide. By the law of Georgia it would be murder." &c.

The Attorney-General said, "that in all the cases put by the right hon. gentleman no doubt could arise. The bill expressly said the fugitives must be tried by the laws of the country where they were found."

Mr. Macaulay asked "whether he was to understand, then, that an action not criminal in a free man, would be held not to be criminal in a slave?"

The Attorney-General said "he was of opinion that an English magistrate would not be at liberty to enter into the question as to whether the fugitive brought before him was a slave or not. He could only enter into such questions of common law (which, of course, means English law) as might arise out of the case; and if the accused person was not shewn to be a criminal, no extradition could take place."

Viscount Palmerston "did not go so far as some of his friends as to the effects of this bill, and the explanation of the hon. and learned gentleman had gone far to remove the apprehensions which he might have entertained. He understood that in no case where a slave was charged with the offence of murder or robbery would any English magistrate be justified in delivering him up for trial, unless the offence he was charged with was one which was looked upon as murder or robbery by the law of England; and he apprehended that any act that a slave might commit in resisting the coercion of his master could not amount to murder, and would not justify a magistrate in giving up the fugitive."

The Attorney-General said nothing to qualify his previous explanations, nor did any other member of the Government dissent. On the contrary, the present Lord Derby (then, if I mistake not, Colonial Secretary) used these words:—

"No fugitive could, under the treaty, be surrendered as a murderer unless his offence were such as our laws would qualify with this epithet."

I make no comment upon the above extracts from Hansard, 3rd series, vol. lxxi, pp. 565-579, beyond calling attention to the fact that the words of the treaty, including its proviso, to the effect that the evidence of "criminality" must be evidence of that which would constitute an offence in the country where the fugitive is "found," are expressly and verbatim recited in the English act, which thus passed its second reading; and that the Canadian act is a mere substitute for the English act so carried through the House of Commons.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Temple, Jan. 15.

GEORGE DENMAN.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—As you have lately done me the favour of inserting in your paper a letter which I addressed to you on the subject of the negro Anderson, I fear that, in now again presenting myself to your notice on the same subject, I may appear intrusive; but I am impelled by a sense of duty to endeavour to bring before the public, with your aid, a view of this case which had not occurred to me when I wrote last, and which no one, I believe, has hitherto suggested in the course of this controversy, though its importance is, to the best of my judgment, very considerable.

The extradition treaty and the statute of Canada both refer, as I understand, in their terms, to "persons" charged with murder or other crimes. Now, I conceive that the word "persons" cannot be here construed as extending to slaves. It must be confined to the men, women, and children to whom the general rights and liabilities of sentient beings attach, and has no reference to those whose social condition is so peculiar as to deprive them of the rights which all others enjoy, and to subject them to liabilities from which all others are exempt.

One of the most marked and hideous features of slavery, as established in America, I apprehend to be, that the negro is merely property—in other words, that he is a chattel, and not a "person;" and, though there may be laws in that country so far protecting him as to make it penal to deprive him of life or member, this cannot properly be considered as investing him with civil rights, or raising him above the character of civil impersonality, any more than in England is the case with cattle because protected by a statute which makes it penal to treat them with cruelty. Accordingly we shall find, I believe, that this idea of the slave's impersonality is always pursued in the phraseology of those American statutes in which it becomes necessary to mention him. These will be found, I think, invariably to speak of slaves as nomine, and never to designate them as "persons;" nor will there be any exception even where there is occasion to speak of the free and the servile within the same enactment; for in such case they will be described not cumulatively as "persons," but distributively as "free persons and slaves;" or, perhaps, as "all persons whatever, whether free or slave;" in which latter case (supposing it to occur) the word "person" would be used in a peculiar sense, being qualified by the words which follow. To return, then, to the treaty and the Canadian statute, there seems strong reason for holding that their provisions with respect to "persons" charged with murder, &c. must have been understood, both on the English and American side, as pointed at free persons, or persons of the ordinary social condition, without reference to those who in America were slaves; to which we may add, that if, on the English side, the idea of the American slaves had presented itself, they would presumably have been excluded in express terms, as there would otherwise be danger (as the event has proved) that, under the guise of an extradition law, our nation would be entrapped (through the medium of falsely charging the negro with a crime) into a law against the fugitive slaves of the Southern States of America—a result at which the bosom of every Englishman would heave with indignation.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

NEMO.

The Morning Post gives the following extract, bearing on this case, from the speech of Lord Aberdeen in the House of Lords, in moving the Extradition of Offenders Bill, on Friday, June 30, 1843:—

"He did not anticipate that any inconvenience could arise from the carrying out of this treaty, except what referred to the case of fugitive slaves; and this was, no doubt, a subject that would require the utmost caution on the part of those who would have to administer the law arising from the new relations between the two countries. Some people had supposed that a fugitive slave might be given up under this treaty. This, he must say, was a most unfounded notion. Not only was a fugitive slave guilty of no crime in endeavouring to escape from a state of bondage, but he was entitled to the sympathy and encouragement of all those who were animated by Christian feelings. But then it had been said that a slave running away might be accused of theft, on the ground that the very clothes he wore were not his own, but the property of his master. This, however, in his (the Earl of Aberdeen's) judgment, could never be construed into a theft. Nay, more, if a slave took a horse with him, or seized upon a boat, or, in short, appropriated to his use anything that was necessary to his flight, such an act could never be held to establish an animus furandi. Another point must be borne in mind, namely, that if at any time a fugitive slave should be demanded under this treaty, the demand would not be made by any slave State, but by the central Government at Washington, and this would in itself be a considerable security against any improper application. Another security would be found in the reference which would be made to the Home Government by the governors of colonies, in case of any difficulty arising, when the Home Government would of course be assisted by the best legal advice that could be obtained. But the great security was, that, by an express stipulation in the treaty, it was agreed that the article by which the two Governments bound themselves to a mutual surrender of criminals should continue in force only till one or other of the two Governments signified its intention to terminate it; so that, whenever inconveniences arose, either Government was at liberty to put an end to that part of the treaty, without being under the necessity of giving any notice beforehand."

The Globe of Monday says, that in pursuance of the rule of the Court of Queen's Bench granting a habeas corpus to bring up the body of the fugitive Anderson, as stated in our last number (p. 11), a messenger of that court proceeded with the writ on Saturday from Liverpool to Canada.

Mr. Colley Harman Scotland, of the Oxford Circuit, has been appointed Chief Justice of Madras, in the room of the late Sir H. Davison. Mr. Scotland was called to the bar in Michaelmas Term, 1843.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 2, 1861.

THE case of Ex parte Thompson, which came before the Queen's Bench (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1247) and the Exchequer (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 48) in Michaelmas Term last, directs attention to the state of the law relative to the merger of offences, and the summary jurisdiction which has been conferred on justices of the peace in cases of assault by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and of aggravated assault by the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, commonly called "The Wife-beating Act." The facts of that case were these:—One Susannah Taylor preferred before a justice of the peace an information and complaint against Thompson, for that "he did unlawfully assault and abuse her, contrary to the statute, &c." On this Thompson was taken into custody, and the case was heard before two justices in petty sessions, both parties being provided with legal advisers. On the attorney for the prosecution beginning to state his case, it was objected by the defendant's attorney that he must confine himself to a charge of common assault. It was then agreed between the parties that the case should be taken as one of aggravated assault under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30. The case then proceeded, and the prosecutrix gave evidence against the defendant, which, if true, unquestionably established that he had committed a rape upon her. The justices, however, convicted the defendant under the Aggravated Assaults Act, and sentenced him to imprisonment for six calendar months. Under these circumstances application was made to the Court of Queen's Bench for a habeas corpus to bring up Thompson in order that he might be discharged, on the ground that the justices had exceeded their jurisdiction; but the Court refused even a rule to shew cause. A similar application having been subsequently made to the Exchequer, that Court granted a rule to shew cause, which was argued; and after time taken to consider, the Barons, differing considerably, proceeded to deliver their opinions separately, in four judgments which well merit attention. The Lord Chief Baron and Wilde, B., considered that the rule ought to be made absolute: that the power of the justices was limited by both statutes to cases of common assault, and when any more serious offence appeared, it was their duty to send the case for trial: that assaulting and abusing a female meant much more than a mere assault. The Lord Chief Baron, moreover, gave it as his opinion that the latter expression, as applied to a female, necessarily implied violation; but Wilde, B., declined to go so far, saying only that it might mean it. The Lord Chief Baron likewise thought that it would be dangerous to give a discretion to the justices to believe a part of the evidence, and disbelieve the rest, as by these means they could virtually pardon a major offence by convicting of a minor. Wilde, B., dissented from this, but declared that in his opinion the justices had not in fact acted on that principle, and had taken the case as one of an aggravated assault, because the parties had consented it should be so taken—a consent which they clearly could not give, it being a principle that consent cannot give jurisdiction. Bramwell and Channell, BB., on the other hand, thought that the rule ought to be discharged: that the charge before the magistrates was a charge of assault only; the term "abuse" in the information might be surplusage; and at all events did not mean rape, although it might mean indecent assault, in which event they thought the justices would have jurisdiction under the Aggravated Assaults Act: that the justices had a right to believe a portion of the evidence, and disbelieve the rest. The Court being thus divided in opinion, the rule of course dropped, and things remained as they were.

The doctrine of the merger of offences, both as it existed at common law and as modified by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, seems much misunderstood, and is often hastily assumed to be useless, or worse. But, conceding that it may occasionally have been pushed too far, and made the means of sacrificing justice to technicality, a little consideration will shew the imperative necessity for the recognition of some such principle in every judicial system which professes to deal out effective justice in criminal cases. Its origin is manifestly this—that while many offences are so essentially distinct that no corruption, perversity, or stupidity could confound them together, there are others which, while differing most materially in enormity, are so connected that one is necessarily involved in the other: e.g. every charge of murder by violence, and every charge of rape necessarily involves an assault; and it is needless to add, that the first of the above is the greatest of all crimes, that the second is one of a very serious character, while the last is among the slightest. Now, it is evident, that either through ignorance of the real facts, or with the design of treating a criminal with leniency, a person guilty of murder or rape might be accused of assault, and, if he could lawfully be convicted on it, would escape the punishment due to the greater crime by undergoing punishment for the lesser. Nor is this all: tribunals which the law may properly entrust with jurisdiction over a lesser offence, would be most improper tribunals to entrust with jurisdiction over a greater; and yet without the law of merger, or something equivalent to it, an inferior tribunal might really dispose of the major offence by convicting of the minor, and thus appropriate to itself a jurisdiction to the exercise of which it was unfitted, and which the law never intended that it should possess. To guard against these mischiefs, it was an established rule of the common law, that where, on a trial for misdemeanour, it appeared that the offence committed amounted to a felony, the accused should be acquitted of the misdemeanour, and put on his trial for the felony. The strict technical observance of this rule, however, having occasionally been productive of evils in the administration of justice, it has received most important modification by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12, which enacts—"If upon the trial of any person for any misdemeanour it shall appear that the facts given in evidence amount in law to a felony, such person shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of such misdemeanour; and no person tried for such misdemeanour shall be liable to be afterwards prosecuted for felony on the same facts, unless the court before which such trial may be had shall think fit, in its discretion, to discharge the jury from giving any verdict upon such trial, and to direct such person to be indicted for felony, in which case such person may be dealt with in all respects as if he had not been put upon his trial for such misdemeanour."

In Ex parte Thompson the Barons of the Exchequer, as has been seen, differed in opinion as to whether the term "abuse," in an information for assault, necessarily implies rape or carnal knowledge. If it does, of course the magistrates ought not to have entertained the case for a moment, further than to consider whether it ought to be dismissed or sent for trial. But taking for granted that the term "abuse" has not that meaning, and that the information disclosed on its face nothing more than an aggravated assault, it may well be argued, that so soon as the evidence disclosed a rape, the justices were bound either to send the case for trial if they believed the evidence, or dismiss the charge if they disbelieved it. Some of the Barons suggested that the justices might believe the evidence so far as related to the assault, and disbelieve it so far as related to the rape. Without pretending to say how far this view is borne out by the language of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, it can hardly be supposed that the Legislature, when vesting in justices of the peace the powers vested in them by those statutes, intended that they were virtually to dispose of cases where murder or rape are charged, by convicting for assault, or aggravated assault, and thus practically, if not legally, stopping all further inquiry.

SALE UNDER A CHARGE OF DEBTS.

WE venture to think that the complication of authorities on this subject has been increased by the decision of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in the case of Hodkinson v. Quin (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 65). There the testator, as to all his lands at T., after his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, should be paid thereout, devised the same to C. and W., to hold the same, subject to the payment of his said debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, unto them and the survivor, and the heirs of such survivor, upon trust for the testator's two daughters for their lives, and after the decease of the survivor, upon trust to sell. A purchaser from the trustees (appointed in place of the original trustees) required the concurrence of the testator's personal representative; but the Vice-Chancellor, on a bill for specific performance filed by the trustees, held that they alone could make a title. His Honor considered himself bound by Robinson v. Lovat (17 Beav. 592; 5 De G., Mac., & G. 272) and Sabin v. Heape (29 L. J., Ch., 79) to consider that the charge of debts gave to the executors at least an equitable power of sale (the decision in Doe v. Hughes, 6 Exch. 223, against their taking a legal power being still unopposed by decision), which equitable power they might exercise at any time before the exercise of the power expressly given to the trustees, but not after a sale by the trustees. And his Honor pointed out the inconvenience of the contrary construction, that the executors would have a power extending over all time—which, being simply collateral, they could not release. The principle of the decision goes to this extent—that if a testator empowers his executors to sell his real estate for payment of his debts, and subject to that power devises his real estate to other persons upon trust to sell in a given event or at a given time, say immediately after the testator's decease, the trustees for sale may, when the prescribed event and time have arrived, anticipate the executors by a sale, and confer a good title, although the debts have not been paid. The Vice-Chancellor said, "I think the rational construction must be, that the power is given to the executors to override the other power, even if the epoch arrived the next day. If I find two powers, the one power given to A. and B., and another power given at a precise epoch, and positively ordered to be carried into effect by C. and D., that power must be carried into effect by C. and D. if A. and B. have not previously exercised their power. A. and B. probably would have the right to exercise their power if the money was wanted in the first instance by them. . . . Any other construction would produce this absurdity—that for all time the beneficiaries could not have a proper sale of the estate unless they got the actual concurrence of the executors, which they might wilfully decline to give." And the Court intimated an opinion, that even in the case of a beneficial devise, subject to a power in the executors to sell for payment of debts, the devisee might, by a sale for his own benefit, defeat the executors' power of sale. In a subsequent part of the judgment the rule that a power simply collateral cannot be released is referred to. Whether the Courts would now feel bound by that rule, which rests on no better authority than some ancient dicta, may be doubted.

We think it will be found, on examination, that there is nothing in the books to justify the broad proposition, that no power simply collateral can be released. There would, indeed, be some shew of reason for refusing to recognise a release of a power which is given to be exercised for the benefit of other persons, on the ground that the power implies a duty; but the dicta as to powers simply collateral are not to be supported on that principle, nor does it justify the distinction which is taken between such powers and a power precisely similar in every circumstance except that the donor has a particular estate in the subject-matter of the power, limited to expire before the appointment can operate. It cannot be reasonably held that the donee of a power, who has an option whether he will exercise it or not, and no duty in respect of it, may not release it; though it may be right to deny effect to a release of a power in the nature of a trust, given to be exercised at all events, or on a contingency which has happened. Thus, in the argument in Albany's case (1 Rep. 110), it was said, "If executors have power to sell land to J. S., and they enter and dispossess the heir and enfeoff a stranger, yet they may sell to J. S., for the reason before;" the reason being that the power was collateral to the title of the land. But when executors have power to sell, in case of need, for payment of debts, although they ought not to release that power so as to prevent their selling when the need arises, yet from the nature of the case, and in order to avoid the inconveniences which would otherwise arise, the executors ought to be able to bind themselves and their successors by a statement that all the debts were satisfied. It is nowhere stated that a power may not be refused in the first instance; and as it seems to be settled at law that a person may refuse one part of a will while he accepts another, which is not conditional on his assenting to the first, there seems to be no reason why an executor may not, after acting on a general power of sale as to Blackacre, disclaim the power as to Whiteacre. Be this as it may, it is certain that the rule against releasing collateral powers, if it exists at all, is confined to legal powers, and therefore cannot, if Doe v. Hughes is right, extend to the power implied by a charge of debts. Whatever difficulty there may be in giving effect to a release by the executors of their power, or a declaration that it has ceased to be exercisable, we think there is much greater difficulty in the construction adopted in Hodkinson v. Quin, that a power expressly given to be exercised "after" or "subject to the payment of debts," can be exercised while the debts remain unpaid, or so as in any way to affect the operation of the charge of debts.

THE CANADA EXTRADITION CASE.

WE propose to lay before our readers the portion of the Ashburton treaty which affects this question, together with the Canadian legislation founded upon it.

The treaty bears date the 9th August, 1842, and relates to several other matters besides the extradition of criminals. The recital bearing on that subject is as follows:—"Whereas it is found expedient, for the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime within the territories and jurisdiction of the two parties respectively, that persons committing the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up."

Then come the various articles of the treaty, of which the only ones having any relation to the subject of extradition are the following:—

Art. 10. "It is agreed that her Britannic Majesty and the United States shall, upon mutual requisitions by them or their ministers, officers, or authorities respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum or shall be found within the territories of the other; provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offence had there been committed; and the respective judges and other magistrates of the two Governments shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, upon complaint made under oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive or person so charged, that he may be brought before such judges or other magistrates respectively, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if, on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining judge or magistrate to certify the same to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of such fugitive. The expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party who makes the requisition and receives the fugitive."

By article 11, the 10th article is to remain in force until one or other of the parties signifies its wish to terminate it, and no longer.

For the purpose of carrying this treaty into effect, the British Parliament passed the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, which is still in force for the British empire in general. But sect. 5 of that statute having reserved a power to colonial legislatures to legislate for themselves in this matter, the Canadian Parliament availed itself of that power, and passed the provincial stat. 22 Vict. c. 89. That statute begins by reciting the treaty, but not the preamble to it. Sect. 1 substitutes the provisions of that statute for those of the Imperial act, and then enacts—"Upon complaint made under oath or affirmation, charging any person found within the limits of this province with having committed within the jurisdiction of the United States of America, or of any of such States, any of the crimes enumerated or provided for by the said treaty, any of the judges, or any justice of the peace, may issue his warrant for the apprehension of the person so charged, that he may be brought before such judge or justice of the peace, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if, on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient by him to sustain the charge according to the laws of this province, if the offence alleged had been committed herein, he shall certify the same, together with a copy of all the testimony taken before him, to the Governor, that a warrant may issue, upon the requisition of the United States, for the surrender of such person, &c., and shall commit such person to prison in the meantime."

The statute contains some other provisions, but the above are the important ones.

Correspondence.

A NEW GENERAL CHARGE ON PROPERTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I beg to call your attention to the 28th section of the recent stat. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, the consequences of which appear rather startling. The section provides, that "in every case in which an attorney or solicitor shall be employed to prosecute or defend any suit, matter, or proceeding, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom any such suit, matter, or proceeding has been heard, or shall be depending, to declare such attorney or solicitor entitled to a charge upon the property recovered or preserved" for costs; "and all conveyances and acts done to defeat, or which shall operate to defeat, such charge or right, shall, unless made to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, be absolutely void and of no effect as against such charge or right."

The language of the latter part of this clause is very peculiar, and most serious questions may be expected to arise under it with respect to mortgagees, who would seem to have been designedly excluded from the benefit of the exception in favour of purchasers without notice. It will be necessary in future for all intending mortgagees, before parting with their money, to require negative evidence that no attorney or solicitor has any unsatisfied claim for costs incurred in recovering or preserving the property intended to be mortgaged; and even purchasers will not be safe in neglecting this precaution, lest they should be fixed with constructive notice of legal expenses having been incurred in relation to the property proposed to be dealt with; and, in spite of every vigilance, many cases will no doubt occur in which such claims will start up, to the prejudice of bona fide purchasers and mortgagees. The act, it may be added, does not contain any provision for a registry of these charges, and, in fact, it would appear to have been intended that they should override prior conveyances and assurances. Such would seem to have been the design of the words invalidating acts "done to defeat, or which shall operate to defeat, such charge or right."

Another expense is thus imposed on conveyancing transactions—another fetter placed on the alienation of property. It is certainly disheartening, at a time when the inexpediency of general charges on property was believed to have been fully recognised and understood, if not by the Legislature, at least by the Profession, to see such a clause as the one I have referred to contained in an act said to have been passed at the instance of the Incorporated Law Society.

Your obedient servant,

Lincoln's-inn.

W.

[The clause to which our correspondent refers authorises the Court to make such order for the taxation, raising, and payment of the costs as shall appear to the Court to be proper; and the Court may decline to make any declaration at all. It will, therefore, be in the power of the Courts to mitigate, if they cannot entirely obviate, the inconveniences suggested in the above letter. It seems clear to us that mortgagees are included in the saving of the rights of purchasers for value, and we think there can be no doubt that the charge is to extend only to the beneficial interest of the client.—ED.]

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

HILARY TERM, 1861.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. Thomas Henry Bartlett, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Matthews, Son, & Storton, of Arthur-street West, London-bridge.

2. Alfred Fox, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. J. E. Fox & Son, of Finsbury-circus, London.

3. Thomas Wilson Spencer, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Spencer, of Keighley, and Messrs. Mackeson & Goldring, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Bartlett, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn; to Mr. Fox, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Spencer, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Robert Blyth, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Andrew Meggy, of Chelmsford, and Mr. John White, of Barge-yard-chambers, London; Peter Gedge, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Jackson & Sparks, of Bury St. Edmunds, and Mr. Thomas Henry Dixon, of New Boswell-court, London; Augustus Henry Reid, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Lloyd & Rule, of Milk-street, London; and Thomas Needham Sheffield, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Sheffield, of Old Broad-street, London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates, that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to prizes or certificates of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

Edward White Bewley, aged twenty-nine, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Hunt Thursfield, of Wrenbury; James Pullen Knott, aged thirty-nine, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Sandys & Hill, of Gray's-inn, London; James Pearce, B.A., aged thirty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. Theod. William Pearce, of Bedford; Martin Scale, aged twenty-seven, who served his clerkship to Mr. William John, of Haverfordwest, and Mr. Richard Boswell Beddome, of Nicholas-lane, London; Weston Joseph Sparkes, aged thirty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Cornish Cleave, of Crediton; Frederick Stanley, aged thirty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Samuel Abrahams, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, London; William Trythall, aged forty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Henry Lloyd Jones, of Bangor; Thomas Hamilton Urry, aged forty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. James Goulbourn Etches, of Whitchurch, Shropshire; and Thomas Whittington, aged thirty, who served his clerkship to Mr. Benjamin Whittington, of Dean-street, Finsbury-square.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 105; of these 77 were passed, and 28 postponed.

By order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, Jan. 26, 1861.

RULES OF PRACTICE ON THE REVENUE SIDE OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Capias.

10. The writ of capias may be in Form 4, Schedule (A.), and shall be in force six calendar months from the date thereof, but the same may be renewed from time to time, for a like period, at any time within the original period of six months, or within the renewed period, by resealing the writ at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

11. The appearance is to be entered, and bail piece filed, in fourteen days after the execution of the writ, inclusive of the day of execution.

12. If the defendant, having given bail to the sheriff, does not appear according to the exigency of the writ, and also file his bail piece, judgment may be signed on filing an information (if not previously filed) and the sheriff's return, and execution may issue in fourteen days from the day of signing judgment.

13. If the defendant appears in due time, and files his special bail, a copy of the information must be delivered to the defendant, or his attorney in case he appears by attorney, and notice may be given (either on the information or separately) to plead in fourteen days from the day of service of such notice, otherwise judgment. The defendant may appear and file his bail at any time before judgment actually signed; but if he does so after the ordinary time for appearance and filing his bail, he or his attorney must in such cases forthwith give notice to the solicitor of the department issuing the writ that he has done so.

14. If the defendant appears and files his bail after the time for appearance, and before information filed, a copy of the information is to be delivered, with notice to plead as before mentioned; and if the defendant appears and files his bail after the information has been filed, and before judgment signed, notice is to be given to him, or to his attorney, at the office of the Queen's Remembrancer, of the day when the information was filed; and he may obtain an office copy thereof on payment for the same, and he must plead thereto within four days from the date of his appearance and filing his bail, otherwise judgment may be signed against him.

15. In any case, if a defendant be in custody for want of bail, he may be served with a copy of the information filed against him, personally, or by delivery of a copy of the information to the gaoler, keeper, or turnkey of the prison; and in default of such defendant appearing and pleading to such information for twenty days from the date of such service, judgment may be entered by default, and execution issue forthwith.

16. In any case where a party is in gaol, and is to be served with a copy of the information, the copy is to be made by the solicitor of the department, but before service the information is to be filed at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office: provided that nothing in these rules shall affect the right to take an assignment of the bail bond.

17. If a defendant be arrested, and gives bail to the sheriff for his appearance, before entering such appearance the defendant shall give a notice, containing the names and addresses of his bail, to the solicitor of the department out of which the capias issued, and which notice shall be left with such solicitor four clear days before application shall be made for the notice to be returned.

18. Should the bail be approved, a bail piece, containing the name of the defendant and his bail, with their respective addresses and occupations, is to be made out on parchment by the defendant or his attorney, and, acknowledged, the leave of a judge must be obtained, if more than two names of bail are inserted in the bail piece. The bail piece, if acknowledged in town, must be before a judge or special commissioner; and, after acknowledgment, filed, together with the Crown's approval of bail, in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office. If acknowledged in the country, it must be before a commissioner duly authorised to take special bail in the Exchequer; in the latter case, after an acknowledgment, an affidavit of caption must be made, which, together with the bail piece and the Crown's approval of bail, must also be filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office; and, at the time of filing his bail, the defendant must also enter his appearance, and give notice to the solicitor of the department that he has done so, if bail be not perfected and appearance entered in due time. If the bail is refused, the parties shall be at liberty to justify before a judge, or, by order of a judge, before the Queen's Remembrancer, upon giving two clear days' notice of their intention to do so to the solicitor of the department who issued the writ of capias, or the defendant may submit the names of other bail for the solicitor's approval.

19. If the defendant requires further time for appearance or perfecting bail, the same may be obtained by summons and order of a judge.

20. By the order of a judge the defendant may render to the county gaol where arrested, but notice of the application must be given to the solicitor of the department; and if order made, and the defendant renders to such county gaol, a copy of such order must be left with the gaoler, and also at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office; but the defendant may render to the Queen's Prison, as at present, on giving notice to the Queen's Remembrancer, who is to prepare a transcript of the bail, and attend with the same and original bail piece before a judge at the time of the defendant rendering. If the defendant only puts in bail for the purpose of rendering, the bail piece and transcript are to be prepared by the defendant, and, after acknowledgment, the bail piece is to be filed at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

Intrusion.

21. In order to assimilate the mode of procedure in intrusion to that in ejectment and trespass on the common-law side of the court as nearly as may be, consistently with the rights and prerogatives of the Crown and the provisions of stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 14, the mode of procedure, to remove persons intruding upon the Queen's possession of lands or premises, shall be separate and distinct from that to recover profits or damages for intrusion.

22. In proceeding by writ of subpoena for intrusion to remove persons intruding upon the Queen's possession of lands or premises, the writ may be directed to the persons intruding by name, and to all persons entitled to defend the possession of the property claimed, and the property intruded upon shall be described in the indorsement on the writ with reasonable certainty.

[For form of writ, see Schedule (A.), No. 2.]

23. The writ shall command the persons to whom it is directed to appear, within fourteen days after service thereof, in the Court of Exchequer, to defend themselves in respect of the property alleged to be intruded upon, or such part thereof as they may think fit; and it shall also contain a notice that, in default of appearance, they will be removed from the premises.

24. The writ may be served in like manner as other writs of subpoena, or in such manner as a court or judge shall order; and in case of there being no person actually resident upon, or in the actual occupation of, the property, such writ may be served by affixing a copy thereof upon the door of any dwelling-house, or upon any other conspicuous part of the premises.

25. The persons named as defendants in such writ, or either of them, shall be allowed to appear within the time appointed.

26. Any other person not named in such writ shall, by leave of the court or a judge, be allowed to appear and defend on filing an affidavit shewing that he is taking the profits either by himself or his tenant of the land, &c.

27. Any person appearing to defend as landlord in respect of property whereof he alleges himself to be taking the profits only by his tenant, shall state in his appearance that he appears as landlord.

28. Any person appearing to such writ shall be at liberty to limit his defence to a part only of the property mentioned in the indorsement on the writ, describing that part with reasonable certainty in a notice intituled "In the Exchequer, and cause," and signed by the party appearing, or his attorney, such notice to be served, within four days after appearance, upon the solicitor whose name is indorsed on the writ; and an appearance without such notice confining the defence to part shall be deemed an appearance to defend for the whole.

29. No judgment for want of appearance, to remove persons intruding, shall be signed without first filing an affidavit of the service of the writ, and a copy thereof, and the information; or, where personal service has not been effected, without first obtaining a judge's order or a rule of court authorising the signing such judgment, which said rule or order, or a duplicate thereof, shall be filed, together with a copy of the writ and the information.

30. Where a person not named in the writ of subpoena, in such cases, has obtained leave of the court or a judge to appear and defend, he shall forthwith enter an appearance, intituled in the suit, against the party or parties named in the writ as defendant or defendants, and shall forthwith give notice of such appearance to the solicitor of the department whose name is indorsed on the back of the writ, and shall plead to the information, and be subject to all the like rules of pleading and practice in respect thereof as if he had originally been named a defendant in the writ.

31. The court or a judge may strike out or confine appearances and defences set up by persons not taking the profit of the land, &c. by themselves or their tenants.

32. In case no appearance shall be entered within the time appointed, or if an appearance be entered, but the defence be limited to part only, the Crown shall be at liberty to proceed with respect to the undefended part of the claim, and may sign judgment and issue execution for the removal of the defendant from the land, or the part whereof to which the defence does not apply, as mentioned in rule No. 5.

33. The fact of intrusion by the defendant shall not be at issue between the parties on the trial; and in cases in which the defendant may plead the general issue under the provisions of the stat. 21

Jac. 1, c. 14, a plea, denying the right of actual possession of the land and premises claimed to be in the Crown, shall (except as to the putting in issue the fact of the intrusion) have the like force and effect as a plea of the general issue would have had before these rules.

34. If the defendant does not appear at the trial of the cause, the defendant shall be taken to have admitted the Crown's title, and the fact of the intrusion; and the verdict shall be entered for the Crown without producing any evidence, and the Crown shall have judgment for costs of suit.

35. The judgment for the Crown in cases of intrusion for the removal of persons intruding shall be a judgment of amoveas and capiatur pro fine, if a fine be sought to be recovered.

36. In case of judgment by default in intrusion for the removal of persons intruding, either for non-appearance or for want of pleading, no costs are to be allowed.

Intrusion for Recovery of Profits or Damages.

37. In proceeding by writ of subpoena for intrusion on the Queen's possessions, and, taking profits, or for damages, the writ shall be directed to the persons intruding by name, and may be in Form 3, Schedule (A.)

38. To an information of intrusion for taking profits, or for damages, the defendant may plead the general issue of non intrusit, or not guilty, subject to the provisions of the stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 14, and the judgment by default will be interlocutory, subject to the provisions of rule 92; the final judgment for the Crown will be, in either case, that the Crown do recover damages and costs, with a capiatur pro fine, if necessary.

Serving a Corporate Body.

39. The service of a writ of subpoena ad respondendum or scire facias, issued from the revenue side of this court against a corporation aggregate, may be served in like manner as a writ of summons issued against a corporation aggregate under the 16th section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, and the like proceedings to judgment may take place thereon as against any other party.

Informations.

40. In all cases the information, when filed, is to be on parchment, and (if not filed before) is to be filed when judgment is signed, and on the information is to be indorsed the day the process issued, applicable to such information, by the solicitor of the department, or by the attorney filing the same; but in any case, if judgment be entered for the defendant, and the information be not filed, the copy delivered to the defendant may be filed in lieu of the original information.

41. All informations shall be delivered or filed, as the case may be, within twelve calendar months after the service or execution of the process for the purpose for which the same issued; and if not, the Crown shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, be deemed out of court; but in any case where a defendant shall be in custody, either on capias or attachment for not appearing, the information, if not before filed, shall be filed, and service thereof made within six weeks after the defendant shall have been arrested, otherwise the defendant shall be at liberty to apply to a judge for his discharge, but notice of such application must be given to the solicitor of the department issuing the writ.

Scire Facias.

The proceedings by scire facias may be thus:—

42. The writ of scire facias may be in Forms 5, 6, 7, 8, or 9; in Schedule (A.), as the case may be, and shall be in force six calendar months from the date thereof, but may be renewed as in cases of subpoena ad respondendum. The service thereof, where practicable, shall be personal, but the order of a judge may be obtained under special circumstances, on affidavit, to dispense with personal service, and to proceed as on the common-law side of the court upon a writ of summons.

43. The appearance to be entered in fourteen days from the day of service, inclusive of the day of service.

44. If the defendant appears to the writ of scire facias in due time, he must plead thereto within fourteen days after appearance entered, otherwise judgment.

45. If the defendant does not appear according to the exigency of the writ, on filing the said writ, and an affidavit of service, or the order of the judge to proceed, judgment may be signed and execution issued in fourteen days from the day of signing such judgment.

46. The defendant may appear at any time before judgment actually signed; but if he does so after the ordinary time for appearance, he, or his attorney, in case he appears by attorney, must in such cases give notice to the solicitor of the department issuing the writ that he has done so, and plead to the writ within four days from the date of his appearance.

47. The scire facias in all cases is to be filed before judgment signed.

Extents (other than those of Estreats).

48. The obtaining of the writ of extent or diem clausit extremum in any case shall be the same as is now in practice, subject to rule No. 1; but when an extent or diem clausit extremum is returned into the office to be filed, eight days after the same has been filed, if the return has expired, if not, within eight days after the same shall have expired, the Crown, without giving a rule to claim, may proceed to realise the property mentioned in the inquisition, or recover any debt, or apply for an order for the sale of any real estate mentioned therein, or for an order to have paid to the Crown any money mentioned in the sheriff's return; but if any debt is returned as owing to the Crown's debtor, and there is danger of its being lost, an extent on an affidavit and fiat may immediately issue for its recovery without waiting such eight days.

49. Where a claim is entered to any property, real or personal, or debts seized, under a writ of extent or diem clausit extremum, or money mentioned in the sheriff's return, notice shall be given by the claimant, or his attorney, to the solicitor of the department, and such claimant, or his attorney, may obtain a copy of the extent or diem clausit extremum and inquisition at the office (which copy may commence as in Form 1, Schedule (C.)), and the solicitor of the department may, on such claim being entered, serve a notice requiring the defendant to plead in fourteen days from the service thereof, otherwise judgment; if time should be required for pleading, the same may be granted by order of a judge.

50. The pleadings in such cases are to be delivered as in other cases.

Writs of Appraisement, Recoveries, and Writs of Delivery, also Claims on Indentures.

51. After the execution of any writ of appraisement, the solicitor of the department is to file the same in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, with an indenture annexed thereto, together with an information of seizure, which is to be prepared by such solicitor; and if no claim be entered for eight days after the same shall be filed, if the return of the writ of appraisement has expired (if not, eight days after the return has expired), a judgment of recovery may be entered, and a writ of delivery issue, for the disposal of the property mentioned in the indenture, without any rule to claim.

52. Should a claim be entered, the same shall be entered at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, on leaving a præcipe for that purpose, the claimant shall have eight days, after entering such claim, to make the affidavit of property, and enter into a recognisance for costs (which recognisance shall be on parchment, and is only necessary in the Inland Revenue department), the sureties to which shall be subject to the approval of the solicitor of Inland Revenue, and the parties to such recognisance shall be the claimant, or his attorney, together with the sureties so approved of. After such claim shall have been entered, affidavit made, and recognisance, where necessary, filed, a copy of the information for the recovery of the property shall be delivered to the claimant, or his attorney, with a notice indorsed thereon or annexed thereto, requiring him to plead in fourteen days, otherwise judgment. If the claimant pleads, the like proceedings shall take place as in other informations. The writ of appraisement, indenture, and proclamations need not form part of the record of Nisi Prius. If after claim entered no affidavit of property shall have been made, or recognisance, where necessary, filed, within the period above named, judgment may be signed as though there had been no claim entered.

53. The affidavit of property is to be prepared in the office, and copied on the indenture, but the recognisance is to be prepared by the attorney of the claimant.

[For form of recognisance, see Schedule (C), Form 12.]

Transcript of Escheats and Outlawries.

54. Eight days after the filing of the transcript of any writ of escheat or capias utlagatum with the inquisition annexed, if the return of such writ has expired, if not, eight days after such return, the Crown or prosecutor, as the case may be, shall be at liberty to realise the value of the goods and chattels, or to issue a writ of levari facias to levy the rents, or a writ of scire facias for the recovery of any debt, or such other writ as may be applicable to the premises mentioned in such transcript, but such transcript need not be inrolled. In case of outlawries, the present practice as to petitioning the Lords of the Treasury to authorise the Attorney-General to consent that the money received by the sheriff, under any writ where the same exceeds 50*l.*, may be paid to the prosecutor, and the application to the court or a judge for that purpose, shall continue as heretofore.

55. Where a claim shall be entered to any property seized under a writ of escheat or capias utlagatum, and the transcript is filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, the claimant or his attorney is to give notice to the solicitor for the Crown, or to the attorney for the prosecutor, of such claim being entered, and thereupon the claimant or his attorney may obtain from the office a copy of the transcript, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, and which copy may commence in Form 2, in the Schedule (C.) hereunto annexed; and upon such claim being entered, the solicitor for the Crown, or the attorney for the prosecutor, may deliver to the defendant (claimant) or his attorney a notice, requiring him to plead in fourteen days from the service of such notice, otherwise judgment; but if time to plead be required, the same may be granted by order of a judge.

56. Subsequent pleadings to be delivered as in other cases.

57. If the defendant outlawed be a beneficed clergyman, a sequestration may issue on an order obtained for that purpose, as is at present the practice.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 9, 1861.

THE claim of the Government of the United States for the extradition of the fugitive slave Anderson has attracted much of the public attention. It has given rise to several letters which have appeared in the public journals, and on last Monday evening was discussed at a very full meeting of the Juridical Society, when considerable differences of opinion prevailed among the speakers, and the debate was adjourned until the next meeting of that body.

In some of the printed publications on the subject it is boldly suggested that, right or wrong, Anderson must not be given up; but in this we cannot concur. When Shylock, in the play, insists on having, by virtue of his bond, the pound of flesh lying nearest to his debtor's heart, the friend of the unfortunate merchant thus supplicates the judge:—

"I beseech you,

Wrest once the law to your authority;

To do a great right, do a little wrong,

And curb this cruel devil of his will."

But what is the answer?—

"It must not be;

'Twill be recorded for a precedent,

And many an error by the same example

Will rush into the state."

Merchant of Venice, Act 4, Scene 1.

If England is bound by treaty to deliver up this man, she ought to do it, however painful; the lives of a thousand men, black, white, or any other colour, should not for one moment be weighed against her honour. A great nation like England must not shew the example of treaty-breaking to any people, but least of all to a slave-holding State like Missouri.

The question, therefore, comes to the construction of the Ashburton Treaty of the 9th August, 1842. This treaty, after reciting that "it is found expedient, for the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime within the territories and jurisdiction of the two parties respectively, that persons committing the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up," contains, in its 10th article, the following provision:—"It is agreed that her Britannic Majesty and the United States shall, upon mutual requisitions by them or their ministers, officers, or authorities respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum or shall be found within the territories of the other: provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offence had there been committed; and the respective judges and other magistrates of the two Governments shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, upon complaint made upon oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive or person so charged, that he may be brought before such judges or other magistrates respectively, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if, on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining judge or magistrate to certify the same to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of such fugitive. The expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party who makes the requisition and receives the fugitive." And by art. 11, the preceding article is to remain in force until one or other of the parties signifies its wish to terminate it, and no longer.

Anderson's case is as follows:—By the law of Missouri any free man who finds a slave attempting to escape from slavery, or above a certain distance from the place of his employment, is authorised to arrest and take him before a magistrate. Anderson, a negro slave, was found by the deceased Digges, a free man, under those circumstances, and on Digges attempting to arrest him, Anderson killed him, and fled into Canada; and the question is, whether, on this state of facts, Anderson is liable to extradition as a person "charged with the crime of murder" within the meaning of the above treaty. The question is not without its difficulties; and we propose to lay before our readers the arguments on both sides.

In favour of the extradition it is urged that this case falls within the express words of the treaty. Every person "charged with the crime of murder" is to be given up. By the law of Missouri, Anderson was clearly guilty of it, for he slew a person who was about to arrest him, having lawful authority to do so. It is true, that this would not have been murder if done in Canada; but all crime is necessarily local, and must be judged of and determined by the law of the place where it is committed. And although it is true that the specific case never could arise in Canada, seeing that there are no slaves there, still the Canadian law fully recognises the principle that he who slays a person who is endeavouring to effect a lawful arrest is guilty of murder; and it would be absurd to expect that the power of arrest should in all countries be delegated to the same class of persons. The provision in the treaty, "that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offence had there been committed," must not be understood with reference to law, but with reference to proof—namely, that although Canadian tribunals are to be governed by the Canadian rules of evidence in declaring the offences in the treaty proved or disproved, they are bound to consult and defer to the laws of the United States in all that relates to the definition of those offences.

These arguments, however fair and plausible, do not satisfy us. In the first place, we must remark that the claiming the extradition of this man, under the circumstances, is, to say the least of it, a most ungracious act on the part of the Americans. Their own author, Wheaton (International Law, 179, note (a), 6th ed.), assures us, that "in the negotiation of treaties, stipulating for the extradition of persons accused or convicted of specific crimes, certain rules are generally followed, especially by constitutional governments. The principal of these rules are, . . . that a state should never authorise the extradition of persons accused or convicted of political or purely local crimes, but should confine its provisions to such acts as are by common accord regarded as grave crimes." For this he cites the French jurist Ortolan, "Règles Internationales de la Mère," vol. 1, p. 346, 2nd ed., which fully bears him out.

But letting this pass, it is to be observed, that, in appealing to international law, the Americans necessarily profess their readiness to obey it; and by that law numerous and very salutary rules have been laid down for the interpretation of treaties, conventions, laws, contracts, &c. Most of these are to be found in the celebrated 16th chapter of the 2nd book of Grotius, "De Jure Belli ac Pacis," and they are reproduced, with little variation, by the most eminent writers on international law who have flourished since his time; e.g. Pufendorf, De Jure Nat. and Gent., lib. 5, c. 12; Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. 2, c. 17; Rutherford's Institutes of Nat. Law, book 2, c. 7. The American jurist, Wheaton (International Law 355, 6th ed.), gives no rules on the subject himself, but refers his readers who are desirous of studying it to Grotius, Vattel, and Rutherford. These rules of interpretation are not the same in all respects as those laid down in the common law, and consequently must not be confounded with them.

Grotius begins (sects. 1 and 2) by laying down, as a fundamental principle, that, "in order to interpret an instrument, we must endeavour to ascertain, not what the parties to it SAID, but what they MEANT." Inasmuch, however, as it is impossible to know what is passing in a man's mind, his intentions can only be learnt from signs, and these are of two kinds—words and conjectures. After giving various rules respecting both these, he proceeds as follows:—

Sect. 20. "There is also another way of interpreting by conjectures, founded upon something else than the signification of the words in which the promise is contained; and this is done in two ways, either by enlarging or restraining them."

Sect. 22. "The interpretation that restrains the import of the word 'promising' is taken either from an original defect in the will of the speaker, or from the repugnancy with his will of a case which arises. An original defect in the will is discovered either from the absurdity which would otherwise evidently follow, or upon failure of the reason, which alone did fully and efficaciously move the will, or from a defect of the matter. The first is grounded upon this, that no man is to be supposed to intend things that are absurd. The second on this, that what is contained in the promise, where such a particular reason is added or plainly implied, is not considered simply in itself, but as it falls under that reason. The third on this, that the matter in hand is always presumed to be present to the mind of the speaker, though his words seem to admit a larger sense. This way of interpretation is treated by rhetoricians under the head περί ὀνόρων καὶ διαβολῶν, concerning the letter and the design."

Sect. 26. "The repugnancy of a case which arises with the will of the speaker is usually referred by rhetoricians to the same head, περί ὀνόρων καὶ διαβολῶν. . . . For since it is impossible to foresee and specify all cases, there is a necessity for reserving the liberty of exempting such as the speaker would, were he present, himself exempt; but this must not be done rashly; for that would be to make oneself sovereign arbitrator of another man's act, and therefore is not to be allowed but when there are sufficient and convincing tokens (indicia) of it.

"The most certain token (certissimum indicium) is, when to adhere precisely to the letter would be unlawful—that is, would be repugnant to natural or divine law; for such things, having no power to oblige, are necessarily to be excepted. Thus, he who has promised to restore a sword that was left him, ought not, if the person be mad, to restore it, lest by so doing he endanger himself or other innocent persons;

ner are we to deliver a thing to him who deposited it with us if the right owner demands it."

Sect. 27. "The second token (secundum indicium) is, when to stick close to the letter is not absolutely and of itself unlawful; but when, upon considering the thing with candour and impartiality, it appears too grievous and burthensome. (Æque rem estimant nimis grave atque intolerabile). And this either in respect of the condition of human nature absolutely considered, or in regard to the person and thing in question, compared with the very end and design of the engagement. Thus, a man who lends a thing for some certain time may demand it before that time if he happens to be very much in want of it himself; because, by the nature of such a beneficial act, no man can be presumed willing to serve his friend to his own extreme prejudice. So, he who has promised an ally the assistance of his troops shall be excused if he be so far engaged in war at home as to have occasion for them himself."

In sect. 10 also he says, that of things that are promised, some are favourable, some odious: favourable being such as carry with them equality, and look to common utility; odious such as lay all the burthen on one party, or lay a greater burthen on one party than on the other. In sect. 12 he tells us that the former are more liberally construed; while, to restrain the effect of the latter, we may even take language in a figurative sense.

Such being the principles of the interpretation of treaties laid down by undoubted authority, we shall proceed to consider the question before us under two different hypotheses—first, that the proviso in the Ashburton Treaty does, and, secondly, that it does not, mean that the crime is to be determined by the law of the place where the fugitive or person is found. On the first of these hypotheses, as in Canada there are no slaves, and consequently no law authorising free men to arrest slaves under the circumstances defined by the law of Missouri, it is clear that the actual case before us never could arise in Canada. Not only ought every presumption to be made against any construction of the treaty which would have the effect of compelling Canada to assist in enforcing such barbarous legislation, but every extradition treaty by implication, and this one by express words, has its basis in reciprocity, which in a case like this present is wholly out of the question.

Let us now take the second hypothesis—namely, that the only effect of the proviso in the Ashburton Treaty is to regulate the proof of the offence, and that it is not to be looked on as giving a definition of the offence itself. The inevitable consequence of this hypothesis is, that the treaty has given no definition at all of the offences which constitute its subject-matter; and in this state of things to what law must we resort for definition of those offences? Must not such a treaty be construed, as all conventions between nations which contain no special provision to the contrary are construed, by the principles and rules of natural and international law, and not by the municipal law of either of the contracting states? This principle is, we apprehend, sufficiently clear; and if any proof of it were wanting in this particular instance, we find it in the language of the treaty itself. The acts of which it speaks are not described as "offences," but as "crimes;" and the evidence of these is spoken of as evidence of "criminality"—two expressions well understood in natural and international law, but unknown to the common law of England, which is also that of the United States of America. Taking this to be so, the term "murder," in natural and international law, means a wrongful slaying with malice aforethought; and we doubt very much whether the slaying even an officer of justice (à fortiori a private individual) who is attempting to arrest the slayer for an act which is only malum prohibitum, and not malum in se, falls within it. The rule in English law, and in that of some other countries, that such slaying amounts to murder, is an artificial one, established by municipal law for the protection of its officers, by converting into murder that which otherwise would amount to manslaughter at most. We will put a few cases illustrative of the consequence of rejecting this principle of definition. Suppose the law of Missouri had gone further than it has, and declared it to be murder in every slave who killed a free man under any circumstances, even per infortunium or se defendendo; and in every female slave who slew a free man under any circumstances, even though he was attempting to ravish her; would it be contended that under the words of this treaty the United States could claim extradition? Again: in England killing in a duel is murder—in some other lands it is not. Could England, under an extradition treaty worded like the present, claim the extradition of an Englishman who had killed another in a duel? Again: look at the next word in the treaty, "piracy." By the general international law, engaging in the slave trade is not piracy, but it has been made so by the law of England: could England, under a treaty worded like the present, claim extradition of a person accused of engaging in the slave trade?

Take, however, either hypothesis. In construing this treaty we are bound to apply the rules for the interpretation of treaties which have been laid down by Grotius and the other eminent writers above mentioned; and we conceive that the present case must come within one, if not both, of the two there last stated; namely—1. That we must restrict the natural meaning of the words of a treaty when the not doing so would have the effect of compelling us to violate some precept either of divine or natural law. 2. That we may so restrict them when the not doing so would impose upon us a grievous and intolerable burthen, which it is clear to the understanding of every person never could have been present to our minds when we entered into the obligation. Whether slavery is inconsistent with the divine law, we do not propose to argue; but it certainly is (at least, in the shape in which it exists in the United States at the present day) at variance with the law of nature. (See Grotius, lib. 2, c. 5, s. 27, and Pufendorff, lib. 6, c. 3, ss. 8, 10). And even Justinian (Inst., lib. 1, tit. 3, s. 2) defines it, "Constitutio juris gentium quæ quis dominio alieno contra naturam subijcitur." And even were this not so, he must, indeed, be a bold man who would contend that the interpretation of a treaty, which would impose on England, in spite of her traditions, her laws, and her principles, incessantly avowed and acted on, the task of doing the police work and becoming the slave-driver to the United States of America, or any other country, was one ever contemplated by her when she entered into it; if not, the putting that interpretation upon it is, in the language of Grotius, "Nimis grave atque intolerabile."

THE FRANCHISE IN THE SLAVE STATES OF AMERICA.

By a strange misrepresentation of a provision in the constitution of the United States, it has been currently stated and believed in this country that every slaveowner in the northern States is entitled, in elections of members of the federal and of the local legislatures, to three votes for every five slaves he possesses. So far is this from being true, that the possession of slaves does not in any State confer a right to vote; and no elector can in any case have more than one vote, except in South Carolina, where the possession of property, as well as residence, confers a franchise, so that, as in the United Kingdom, the same man may have a vote in elections for several districts; while, in each slave State, every citizen who has resided in the State and in the electoral district during a certain period (in no case longer than two years) is entitled to vote, except only, in North Carolina, for the election of senators, for which purpose the qualification is a freehold of fifty acres, or a town lot.

The election of the federal government is thus provided for by the constitution of March, 1789:—

"Art. 1, sect. 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a congress of the United States, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives.

"Sect. 2. (1). The house of representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

(The next clause prescribes the qualifications of representatives.)

"(3). Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within the union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons"—i. e. slaves, to whom there is only one other reference in this document, intended to guarantee the blessings of liberty—namely, in the 2nd section of art. 4, which provides for the delivery of slaves flying from one State into another; and there, with almost equal delicacy, they are designated as "persons held to service or labour."

"Sect. 3. (1). The senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years, and each senator shall have one vote."

"Art. 2, sect. 1. (1). The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold office during the term of four years; and, together with a Vice-President chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:—

"(2). Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the State may be entitled in the congress." Of these electors each may vote for two persons, and the candidate having the greatest number of votes from the several electoral colleges shall be the President, and the one having the next greatest number shall be the Vice-President.

In each of the slave States the legislature consists of two houses—a senate and a house of representatives. The senators, equally with the members of the lower house, are returned by districts; in some States for the same term, five years; in others for four years. In New Jersey the members of both houses are chosen for one year. The senate consists of fewer members than the lower house. The executive power is in the governor, who also, in some States, has an absolute or a qualified vote on acts of the legislature. In Georgia and South Carolina the governor is elected by the two houses collectively; in the other States he is chosen by the people. In New Jersey his term of office is one year; in Alabama, the Carolinas, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee it is two years; in the other slave States four years.

Each State is divided into counties and electoral districts, and the number of members returned for each district is either fixed or regulated by the white population, or by the white population and three-fifths of the slaves. In some States a freehold qualification is required for members of either house. Thus, in South Carolina the qualification is 500 acres of land and ten negroes, or a real estate of the clear [annual?] value of 150*l*.

In North Carolina no person can vote at the election of a senator who is not a freeman of the age of twenty-one, possessing a freehold within the district of fifty acres of land, and having resided in the district during the year preceding the election. All adult freemen having resided a year in the district or town, or holding a freehold in a town, may vote for members of the lower house, and for the governor. Negroes and their descendants to the fourth generation inclusive are disqualified to vote.

In South Carolina the qualification of adult whites to vote for members of either house, and for the governor, is either tax-paying and residence during six months, or the possession of a freehold of fifty acres, or a town lot.

In the other slave States (Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia) every adult white citizen who has resided a certain time in the district is qualified to vote for members of both houses, and for the governor. In Tennessee, persons of colour, being competent as witnesses, may vote.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

HILARY TERM, 24 VICT.—Jan. 30, 1861.

This Court will hold a sitting on Monday, the 25th day of February next, and will at such sitting proceed in giving judgment in matters then standing for judgment.

S. MARTIN.
 G. BRAMWELL.
 W. F. CHANNELL.
 JAMES WILDE.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A very full meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 4th inst., R. P. Collier, Esq., Q. C., M. P., in the chair, when a paper was read by the Hon. George Denman, M. P., on the question—"Is the Government of the United States of America entitled, under the Ashburton Treaty, to claim the extradition of the fugitive Anderson?" A discussion ensued, in which the chairman, Mr. Fitz-james Stephen, and Mr. W. M. Best took part. Considerable differences of opinion prevailed among the speakers; and on the motion of Mr. Westlake, the debate was adjourned to Monday, the 18th inst.

Mr. John Smale, of the Chancery bar, has been appointed Attorney-General for Hongkong. Mr. Smale was called to the bar in 1842, and is well known to the Profession as contributor to the reports of De Gex & Smale and Smale & Giffard.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN COMMON LAW.—Thomas Harrison, jun., Gent., of No. 5, Walbrook, has been appointed a London Commissioner for administering oaths in common law in the Court of Exchequer.

We have to record the decease of Mr. Lancelot Shadwell, of the Chancery bar, revising barrister for Middlesex.

SELWYN'S NISI PRIUS.—New Edition.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo., 1859, price 2l. 18s. cloth.

SELWYN'S ABRIDGMENT of the LAW of NISI PRIUS. Twelfth Edition, with considerable Alterations and Additions. By DAVID POWER, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel, Recorder of Ipswich.

"No book has shewn by its longevity the original strength and soundness of its constitution more than Selwyn's Nisi Prius. It is one of the standard classics of the law to be found in every professional man's library in the kingdom, and the lapse of years has but proved its value and excellency. Selwyn's Abridgment of the Law of Nisi Prius has now reached its twelfth edition; and, in consequence of the very able revision, and, we may almost say, in some parts of the work, the admirable judgment and care displayed by Mr. Power in the entire reconstruction of some of the most important chapters of the work, its value is enhanced greatly—alike to the student and the practitioner in both branches of the Profession. . . . In bringing our notice of the twelfth edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius to a close, we can assure Mr. Power that he has fully succeeded in the laborious task which he has undertaken. The whole Profession will feel that it is indebted to him for a work that is in every way deserving high praise and recommendation. A new edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius has long been wanted by students, attorneys, and counsel, and at last we are happy to say the task has been accomplished, and a work produced that ought to be found on the shelves of every professional man's library in the kingdom."—County Courts Chronicle, July 1, 1859.

"We may be sure that a law book which passes through 'twelve editions' has been fully tested and generally approved of by the Profession. The work before us comes with this high recommendation, and has well earned its title to a renewal of its term on the ground of public utility. It is a good sound work, well conceived and well arranged—a favourite alike with the law student and the advocate in full business. A judicious combination of old and modern law, of principles and practice, renders it very useful, as a book to be carefully studied, as a work of reference in chambers, and as a circuit companion. It is far more readable than the works which bear a similar title, and, indeed, may rather be termed a treatise upon actions at law than a mere Nisi Prius book. We thank the learned editor for having given to the Profession an excellent edition of this valuable work."—Jurist, June 4, 1859.

"On the whole, therefore, we believe that we can conscientiously recommend this new edition of a very celebrated work to our readers. It has throughout the appearance of having been worked up with much care; and Mr. Power's reputation is no slight guarantee that this industry has been generally successful."—Solicitors' Journal, May 21, 1859.

"Great was the reputation of Selwyn's Nisi Prius in our young days. It was the handbook of the practitioner in office or chambers, and its authority in all the courts. The law and the practice of the law have been changed. As we have him now, Selwyn is no longer an antiquity; but, resuscitated by Power, his youth is restored, so that he combines whatever of wisdom there was in him, with the knowledge of this latter era in the world's history. Seriously, Mr. Power has reproduced Selwyn."—Law Times, June 18, 1859.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 16, 1861.

MR. GEORGE SYLVESTER, coroner for Wilts, appeared in the Court of Queen's Bench on the last day but one of Hilary Term, to shew cause against the rule obtained by the Attorney-General to quash the inquisition taken in the affair of the Road murder, and for a melius inquirendum. The coroner made an affidavit himself, and produced several others in support of his case; and after hearing his counsel in opposition to the rule, and the counsel for the Crown in support of it, the Court discharged the rule; saying that although, in their opinion, the coroner might in one respect have exercised a sounder discretion than he did, there were no sufficient grounds to justify their quashing the inquisition, or ordering a melius inquirendum. On the materials before them the Court could not have decided otherwise; but the result of the proceeding has been that, although we are apparently as far as ever from discovering the perpetrator of the Road murder, we are enabled to form a tolerably good conjecture as to the causes of the defeat which justice has sustained in that mysterious tragedy.

The circumstances of the Road murder, and the blundering and unsuccessful steps taken for its detection, are probably familiar to every person in the kingdom. We have stated them on former occasions, and need not now repeat them. After all those steps had failed, a light broke in on the authorities, and they concluded that probably the original cause of the mischief was to be found in the manner in which the inquest, held on the body in July last, was conducted by the coroner of Wilts. Acting on this view, the Attorney-General moved for and obtained the rule above mentioned, on three grounds—first, that the inquisition was bad as being drawn up on paper instead of parchment; secondly, that the coroner had refused to pursue, and by his intervention prevented, certain important inquiries which the jury desired should be made; and, thirdly, that the coroner had misdirected the jury, by telling them that their duty was limited to ascertaining the cause of death, and that it was not their duty to inquire as to the person by whom the murder was committed, but that that was the duty of the magistrates. When the rule came on for argument, the first of these points was abandoned by the counsel for the Crown, so that we need only direct attention to the two last.

As to the second charge, the evidence adduced by the coroner, although it contradicts that of the Crown in some respects, does not contradict the essential fact that the jury were desirous to examine the inmates of the house where the body was found, and that the coroner opposed that course; that he finally gave way as regarded some of them, but peremptorily refused to examine the master of the house, although that person, by his attorney, declared his readiness to be examined. The coroner, however, stated, as his reason for this course, that the jury had very early in, and throughout the inquiry, assumed that the inmates of the house were the criminals, and had expressed their conviction to that effect in an indecorous and violent manner. This logic did not, however, satisfy the Court, and it would have been strange if it had. The English law has been assailed with much ridicule and invective on account of the indulgence it shews to accused persons and witnesses—most unjustly, when the real state of the law, and the reasons on which it is founded, are understood. But if our law were as expounded by the coroner of Wilts in this instance, it would richly deserve all that has ever been said against it. There is no rule of law that a man shall not be permitted to criminate himself; the law is, that he is not bound, or shall not be compelled, to do so—nemo tenetur seipsum prodere; but if he chooses to do it, especially after having been warned by the tribunal of his danger, what he says is perfectly receivable against him. See now how, even according to his own shewing, the coroner of Wilts acted. A child is found murdered in a dwelling-house, in which there are several inmates, under circumstances which render it highly probable (for that is the extent of the evidence) that the murder was perpetrated by some one or more of them. On this the coroner assumes that such must have been the case, and, on the strength of that assumption, exhibits the greatest reluctance to examine the inmates, lest possibly he might stumble against the guilty person, and, when urged to examine the master of the house in particular, peremptorily refuses. No wonder the Court considered him guilty of an error in judgment.

But the remaining head of accusation remains to be considered—that the coroner told the jury that their duty was limited to ascertaining the cause of death, and that it was not their duty to inquire as to the person by whom the murder was committed, but that that was the duty of the magistrates—language of such a character that the Lord Chief Justice said “it was impossible the coroner could have given such a charge except from a corrupt motive.” The coroner, however, in his affidavit, positively denied that he did give that charge; and in this he is confirmed by six or seven other witnesses. He admitted, however, that certain portions of his summing up, taken singly, might bear that construction; and it must not be forgotten that no less than twenty witnesses on the part of the Crown, twelve of whom were on the jury, swore that he did give that charge. Under these circumstances the Court of Queen’s Bench had no alternative but to follow the established rule of practice—to believe the witnesses who swore last, leaving them to be indicted for perjury if their statements should turn out untrue. We think it exceedingly probable, that, although the coroner did not use the language he was charged with having used, he did use some language calculated, either directly or indirectly, to convey to the minds of the jury an impression of the nature imputed; and we are confirmed in this by the circumstance that one of his own witnesses deposed that the coroner “concluded by expressing his opinion that an open verdict would best further the ends of justice, as the evidence seemed to point to no one in particular; and that the coroner acted wisely in concluding the inquiry, and so leaving the matter in the hands of the magistrates.” What talisman for discovering the guilty party is in the possession of magistrates more than of a coroner’s inquest, when the evidence points to no one in particular, we are at a loss to imagine.

There are two observations suggested by this unfortunate affair. First, that the defeat which justice has for the present (we hope only for the present) sustained does not seem traceable to any defect in the law, whatever may be said of the conduct of those appointed to administer it. Secondly, it is a favourite doctrine among a certain class of legal reformers, that the institution of the coroner’s jury is absurd, or at least antiquated, and that it would be far better to entrust all inquiries about the perpetration of secret crimes, to officials, either in the shape of magistrates, police, or otherwise; and indeed some notion of this sort appears to have existed in the mind of the coroner of Wilts on the present occasion. Look at this theory by the light afforded by the Road murder. The lay and unofficial jurors, acting on the natural dictate of common sense, “if you do not know, inquire,” desired to examine the inmates of the house where the corpse was found, in order to get information from the quarter whence it might most naturally be expected. To this the official coroner offers every resistance, from error in judgment indeed, but still with fatal success. The next official person who appears is an experienced detective officer, sent down from the metropolis, who exhibited his discretion by publicly charging a young lady with murder because she could not account for all her night-dresses, and had used to her schoolfellows some expressions indicative of dislike to her half-brother and sister. A mischievous idiot next declares himself the murderer, and when brought before the magistrates proves an alibi, and is dismissed, the magistrates generously paying him passage home. Some policemen are sent to search the house; they find a bloody shift carefully hidden in a place where it was likely to be burnt; and suppress this piece of real evidence from the magistrates, because there were females in the house—conduct only defensible if we can admit the hypothesis that women are in the habit of burning their linen once a month. Next, one of the magistrates, dissatisfied with the inquiries made by his brethren, and acting in avowed defiance of all the rules of evidence, holds a special inquiry for himself, in which every species of village gossip, absurd conjecture, and malicious imputation is received indiscriminately. In short, the case of the Road murder does not afford the school of law reformers to which we have alluded much encouragement in their theory, or much temptation to the people of England to part with that which for ages has been the great protection of human life in this country—the coroner’s jury.

THE EXTRADITION CASE.

THIS subject has been brought before the House of Commons by Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Collier. The Prime Minister stated, that before the habeas corpus was moved for, the Secretary of State for the Colonies wrote to the Governor-General of Canada, directing that Anderson should not be given up to the authorities of the United States until instructions to that effect were sent from England. Lord Palmerston also said that Anderson would not be brought to England by the route of the United States, and consequently must not be expected in England until navigation by the other route is open.

Mr. Norton, Master of the Crown Office, has been promoted to the office of Queen’s Coroner and Attorney, vacant by the decease of Mr. Corner. Mr. J. G. Malcolm, of the Home Circuit, succeeds Mr. Norton as Master of the Crown Office.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In the article on the franchise in the slave States of America, published in to-day's number, there are several mistakes, which I am sure you will be anxious to correct.

The two references in the United States Constitution to slaves, mentioned in the article, are not the only references. In art. 1, sect. 9, "the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such persons, not exceeding ten dollars for each person." As soon as the time came Congress exercised this power, so far as to prohibit, by an act of the 2nd March, 1807, the importation of slaves from abroad after the 1st January, 1808.

In speaking of the election of President and Vice-President, your writer has given the rule as laid down in the original constitution, without mentioning that in 1803 an amendment of the constitution was made, under which, ever since, the Vice-President has been voted for in a separate ballot from the President, but at the same time.

Again: it is a mistake to say, that "in some States senators are returned for the same term, five years (as the members of the lower house); in others for four years." The following is, I believe, a correct statement:—In Alabama the senators are elected for three years, the members of the lower house for one year; in Florida, the former for two years, the latter for one; in Georgia, North Carolina, and Tennessee, both for two years; in all the other slave States, the senators for four years, the members of the lower house for two years.

Again: the Governor of Georgia has been since 1824 elected by the people. South Carolina is the only State in which the Governor is chosen by the legislature, as she is the only one in which the legislature chooses the electors for President of the United States.

In the enumeration of slave States, Missouri is improperly omitted, and New Jersey improperly included. In the latter State, as late as 1860 there were 236 apprentices, the relics of slavery, in accordance with the State Act to abolish it of the 18th April, 1846; but it cannot be included amongst the slave States. Moreover, the term of office in that State is three years for governor, three for senators, and one for the lower house.

My authorities for the above statements are (chiefly) the Constitutions of the States, New York, 1854, and the Statesman's Manual, do. The American Almanac is, I think, inaccurate in one or two cases.

I have the honour to be,

Your constant subscriber and well-wisher,
HENRY T. RILEY.

St. John's College, Cambridge, Feb. 9, 1861.

[We are obliged to Mr. Riley for his communication. "The same term, five years," was a misprint for "the same term of two years." Our information was taken from the most recent authorities at hand—Brightley's Digest of the Laws of the United States, Philadelphia, 1858, and Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Philadelphia, 1855. Unlike Mr. Crabtree, we are willing to admit that our correspondent's statement, as it is more circumstantial, is likely to be also more correct than ours. We had overlooked the saving of the slave trade by art. 1, sect. 9, of the charter of liberty. It is, both formally and substantially, a fine example in the art of compromise.—Ed.]

EAST INDIA STOCK AS AN INVESTMENT FOR TRUSTEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Since trustees, in the absence of express direction to the contrary, are now, by recent legislation, authorised to invest in East India Stock, it may be well to call particular attention to one of its incidents which seems materially to affect its eligibility as a security for trust funds. I allude to the fact of its being subject to redemption by Parliament after the 30th April, 1874, at the rate of 200l. per centum. (See stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 12).

The market price of the stock being now 217l.-220l., it is obvious that, where the cestuis que trust are entitled in succession, a trustee, by investing, would be benefiting the first takers at the expense, or at least at the risk, of their successors.

Probably, however, it would be held that the statutory indemnity does not apply to such a case, as the 32nd section of stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, only operates "provided that such investment shall in other respects be reasonable and proper."

If this section had stood alone, I should have no doubt that the proviso would, in the case referred to, have excluded a trustee from the indemnity; but it might be contended that the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 11, coupled with the General Order of the 1st inst. (and which Order authorises an investment of monies under the control of the Court in certain specified securities, of which East India Stock is one), confers on trustees acting bona fide an absolute and unqualified indemnity.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

Feb. 11, 1861.

ORDER OF COURT.—FEBRUARY 5, 1861.

On Evidence.

The Right Hon. JOHN Lord CAMPBELL, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JOHN ROMILLY, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir RICHARD TORIN KINDERSLEY, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JOHN STUART, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir WILLIAM PAGE WOOD, doth hereby, in pursuance and execution of powers given by the stats. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 128, and of all other powers and authorities enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following:—

I. The course of proceeding prescribed by the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, with regard to the mode of examining witnesses and taking evidence in the Court of Chancery, and the practice of the court relating thereto, shall be and hereby are altered in the manner and to the extent prescribed by the following rules, but not further or otherwise.

II. The rules numbered respectively 3 and 4 of the 18th of the Consolidated General Orders, and the rules numbered respectively 3, 7, 9, and 13 of the 19th of the same Orders, are hereby abrogated.

III. In any cause in which issue is joined, the plaintiff or any defendant may, at any time within fourteen days after issue joined, apply to the judge in chambers, by summons to be served on the opposite party, for an order that the evidence in chief as to any facts or issues (such facts and issues to be distinctly and concisely specified in the summons) may be taken vivâ voce at the hearing of the cause; and the judge may make an order that the evidence in chief as to such facts and issues, or any of them, shall be taken vivâ voce at the hearing accordingly; and the facts and issues, as to which any such order shall direct that the evidence in chief shall be taken vivâ voce at the hearing, shall be distinctly and concisely specified in such order; but in case the judge shall be satisfied that such application is unreasonable, or made for the purpose of delay, oppression, or vexation, he may refuse to make any such order; and where any such order shall have been made, the examination in chief, as well as the cross-examination and re-examination, shall be taken before the court at the hearing as to the facts and issues specified in such order. And no affidavit or evidence taken before an examiner shall be admissible at the hearing of any such cause in respect of any fact or issue which shall be included in any such order as aforesaid.

IV. Save as aforesaid, and save in the case mentioned in the 11th of these rules, it shall not be competent to the plaintiff or any defendant to require, by notice or otherwise, that the evidence in chief to be used at the hearing of a cause shall be taken orally.

But, except as to facts or issues included in any order directing evidence in chief to be taken vivâ voce at the hearing, under the 3rd of these rules, each party in a cause in which issue is joined shall be at liberty to verify his case either wholly or partially by affidavit, or wholly or partially by the oral examination of witnesses ex parte before one of the examiners of the court, or before a special examiner, in the manner prescribed by the 6th of these rules.

V. The evidence in chief on both sides, in any cause in which issue is joined, to be used at the hearing thereof, in respect of facts and issues not included in any order for taking evidence in chief vivâ voce at the hearing, under the 3rd of these rules, shall, whether taken by affidavit or before an examiner (and including the cross-examination and re-examination of any witness or other person under the 10th and 11th of these rules), be closed within eight weeks after issue joined, unless the time be enlarged by special order.

VI. Except in the cases mentioned in the 10th, 11th, 16th, and 17th of these rules, all examinations taken by the examiners of the court, or by any special examiner, for the purpose of being used at the hearing of a cause in which issue is joined, shall be taken ex parte; and no person shall have a right to be present at the taking of any such examination except the party producing the witness, his counsel, solicitor, and agents; and every examination so taken ex parte shall be deemed to be an affidavit; and the examiner, before transmitting the same to the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs to be filed, shall mark the same as taken ex parte, and the Clerks of Records and Writs shall deal with the same as an affidavit.

VII. Except in the cases mentioned in the 10th, 11th, 16th, and 17th of these rules, no cross-examination of any deponent or witness, or of any party, to be used at the hearing of a cause in which issue is joined, shall be taken otherwise than before the court at the hearing.

VIII. Where any such order as is mentioned in the 3rd of these rules has been made, the Clerks of Records and Writs, upon giving a certificate that the cause is ready for hearing, shall make, in or upon the certificate, an entry shewing that an order for taking evidence in chief vivâ voce at the hearing has been made; and the registrars, in setting down the cause for hearing in the cause-book of the judge to whose court the same is attached, shall mark the same so as to indicate that the taking of evidence in chief vivâ voce at the hearing has been ordered; and the same shall not come on to be heard without the special direction of the court, which may be obtained upon an application to the court by either party, upon notice, to have a day fixed for the hearing.

IX. Where any such order, as mentioned in the 3rd of these rules, has been made, each party shall be at liberty to sue out, at the Record and Writ Clerks' Office, subpoenas ad testificandum and subpoenas duces tecum, to compel the attendance, at the hearing, of witnesses whom he may desire to produce on any issue or matter of fact included in such order. Such subpoenas may be according to the forms of subpoenas now in use in this court, with such variations as the circumstances of the case shall require.

X. Notwithstanding any of the preceding rules, if, at any time after issue joined, the parties shall, by writing signed by them or their respective solicitors, and filed at the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs, agree that the oral examination in chief and cross-examination of any witness or witnesses (whether a party or parties, or not), or the cross-examination of any person or persons who shall have an affidavit or affidavits, or who shall have been examined ex parte before an examiner, shall be taken before one of the examiners of the court, or a special examiner, in manner provided by the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, such examination may be taken accordingly; and in case, by virtue of any such agreement, any witness or person shall be examined in chief before the examiner or special examiner, the cross-examination and re-examination of such witness or person shall be taken before the same examiner or special examiner, or his successor in office; and the cross-examination of every witness so examined in chief shall immediately follow his examination in chief, and the re-examination of every witness or person so cross-examined shall immediately follow his cross-examination.

XI. Notwithstanding any of these rules, the court, or the judge in chambers, may direct that the oral examination and cross-examination of any witness (whether a party or not), or the cross-examination of any person who has been examined ex parte before an examiner, or made an affidavit, shall be taken before an examiner of the court or a special examiner, in the manner prescribed by the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, as if these rules had not been made, in case it shall appear to the judge, that owing to the age, infirmity, or absence out of the jurisdiction of such witness or person, or for any other cause which to the judge shall appear sufficient, it is expedient that such direction should be given. Such direction may be obtained on application to the court or the judge in chambers, on notice.

XII. In the case of the examination or cross-examination, under the last preceding rule, of any person in England or Wales, the party requiring such examination or cross-examination may apply to the court or the judge in chambers for an order that one of the examiners of the court may attend, for the purpose of such examination or cross-examination, at any place or places in England or Wales to be named in such order.

XIII. The examiner shall, in respect of expenses incident to the performance of his duty under such order as mentioned in the last preceding rule, be entitled to receive, on the production to him of such order, such sums of money as are mentioned in the schedule hereto. Such sums shall be paid to him by the party obtaining such order; and, subject to any direction of the court, or of the judge in chambers, to the contrary, shall be costs in the cause.

XIV. Upon any appeal, rehearing by way of appeal, or further proceedings, the judge's notes of the vivâ voce evidence shall primâ facie be deemed to be a sufficient note thereof.

XV. Evidence taken in a cause subsequently to the hearing, shall continue to be taken according to the provisions of the stats. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, subject, however, to any special directions which may be given in any particular case; and all evidence taken at the hearing of any cause may be used in any subsequent proceeding in the same cause.

XVI. In suits to perpetuate testimony, evidence shall continue to be taken according to the now existing practice.

XVII. The evidence to be used at the hearing of causes in which issue shall have been joined before the first day of Easter Term, 1861, shall be taken according to the now existing practice.

XVIII. No affidavit filed on or after the first day of Easter Term, 1861, shall be used as evidence on any proceeding in any cause or matter unless there be written at the foot thereof, at the time of filing the same, a memorandum stating by whom the same is filed, which memorandum shall be in the form following, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit; that is to say, "This affidavit is filed on the part and behalf of the plaintiffs," (or "of the defendants M. and N.")

XIX. Where in any cause or matter a party has filed an affidavit, or where, in any cause in which issue has been joined, a party has examined a witness ex parte before the examiner, under the 6th of these rules, any opposite party, desiring to cross-examine the deponent or witness, shall not be obliged to procure the attendance of such deponent or witness for cross-examination either before the examiner or before the court; but any such opposite party may serve upon the party by whom such affidavit has been filed, or witness examined, or his solicitor, a notice in writing requiring the production of such deponent or witness for cross-examination before the examiner or before the court, as the case may be, such notice to be served within such time as hereinafter mentioned, or within such time as in any case the court or the judge in chambers may specially appoint; that is to say, where such cross-examination is to be taken before the court at the hearing of a cause in which issue is joined, then at any time before the expiration of fourteen days next after the closing of the evidence; and where such cross-examination is to be taken before the examiner in a cause in which a notice of motion for a decree or decretal order has been served, and to be used at the hearing of such motion, then at any time before the expiration of fourteen days next after the end of the time allowed for the plaintiff to file affidavits in reply; and in every other case within fourteen days next after the filing of the affidavit or examination upon which such deponent or witness is to be cross-examined; and unless such deponent or witness be produced accordingly, such affidavit or examination shall not be used as evidence unless by the special leave of the court. The party producing such deponent or witness shall be entitled to demand the expenses thereof in the first instance from the party requiring such production; but such expenses shall ultimately be borne as the court shall direct.

XX. Where any such notice as is mentioned in the 19th of these rules is given, the party to whom it is given shall be entitled to compel the attendance of the deponent or witness for cross-examination before the court at the hearing of the cause, or before the examiner, as the case may be, in the same way as he might compel the attendance of a witness to be examined in viva voce at the hearing under the 3rd of these rules.

XXI. Where any such notice as mentioned in the 19th of these rules is given for the production of any deponent or witness, for cross-examination at the hearing of a cause in which issue is joined, either party may, upon notice, apply to the court or to the judge in chambers to fix a day for the hearing of the cause.

XXII. Any party in any cause or matter requiring the attendance of any witness, whether a party or not, before the court, or before one of the examiners of the court, or a special examiner, for the purpose of being examined, or of being cross-examined, shall give to the opposite party forty-eight hours' notice at least of his intention to examine or cross-examine such witness; such notice to contain the name and description of the witness, and the time and place of such examination or cross-examination, unless the court shall in any case think fit to dispense with such notice.

XXIII. Each statement in an affidavit, which is to be used as evidence at the hearing of a cause or matter, or of a motion for a decree or other motion, or on any other proceeding before the court or before the judge in chambers, shall shew the means of knowledge of the person making such statement.

XXIV. In all causes and matters to which any infant, married woman, person of unsound mind, whether found so by inquisition or not, or person under any other disability, is a party, any consent as to the mode of taking evidence, or of any other procedure, shall, if given with the sanction of the court or of the judge in chambers, by the next friend, guardian, committee, or other person acting on behalf of the person under such disability, have the same force and effect as if such party were under no disability, and had given such consent: provided that no such consent by any committee of a lunatic shall be valid, as between him and the lunatic, unless given with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices sitting in lunacy.

XXV. These rules shall come into operation on the first day of Easter Term, 1861; and the general interpretation clause in the Consolidated General Orders shall be deemed to extend to the rules of this Order.

THE LAW OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

SPEECH OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

ON Monday evening the Attorney-General introduced into the House of Commons a bill to amend the law relating to bankruptcy and insolvency. Its nature and extent will be clearly understood from his speech on introducing it, which we give as reported in The Times of Tuesday, and from which it will be seen that the new bill differs very materially from that of last session.

The Attorney-General rose to move for leave to bring in a bill to amend the law relating to bankruptcy and insolvency. He said—I hope the bill which I am about to move for leave to introduce will be brought before you under happier auspices than its predecessor of last year. At the same time I must say that, while I regretted the necessity of abandoning the unfortunate bill of last session, I have been very much consoled by the reflection that in preparing the present measure I have had to direct my attention to a number of topics to which I felt it necessary that greater consideration should be given; and I hope that I have succeeded in framing a measure which you will receive with greater favour than you were disposed to shew to that which preceded it. You will recollect that one of the circumstances that accompanied the introduction of that bill was its ponderous appearance. I have deferred to the opinion then expressed, and surrendered my own judgment to the feeling that prevailed; and I am happy to say that the bill which I now propose to introduce is less by one-half than the bill of last session. But you will do me the favour to recollect that the bill which I then introduced was a consolidating, as well as an amending measure. The law of bankruptcy is entirely lex scripta. It is composed of statutory provisions, and those provisions are to be found scattered over a great number of acts of Parliament, all of which must be consulted in order to obtain a just idea of the law. As there exists a general opinion that acts of Parliament ought to be consolidated, I felt last year that it was my duty to attempt to consolidate the whole of the written law on the subject of bankruptcy. The present, however, is only an amending bill, and is therefore of a fragmentary and disconnected character, the provisions of which cannot be at once perfectly understood from the want of those lights that might be cast on them from other statutes which are left untouched. In framing the present bill I have entirely abandoned consolidation, though my feelings and sentiments are all in favour of a consolidating measure; but it is at all times desirable to propose that which is likely to pass; and if I can succeed in inducing you to pass this measure during the present session—a measure more than ever demanded by the mercantile community—it will in some future session probably enable us to consolidate the whole law of bankruptcy, of which this bill, if it receives your approbation, will form an important element. I will very shortly remind you of the important principles which it was desired to establish and carry into execution by the measure of last year. You will remember, probably, that one of the great evils which I thought called for a remedy was the confusion that now exists in bankruptcy between the judicial and administrative functions of the court. These are conducted in such a manner that the one has no order, or economy, or regularity, and the other has neither dignity nor efficiency. One object of the last bill, therefore, was to separate the judicial from the administrative functions—to bring home to the body of the creditors all those duties touching the administrative part of the law which it is necessary should be discharged in the first instance; and, at the same time, to give to the judicial functions of the court that uniformity and certainty of decision, and that elevation of judgment, which would wipe away the reproach that now attaches to the law as it stands. One of the other features of the late measure was to restore to the creditors of the bankrupt the power of settling their own affairs. The principle on which the law of insolvency rests is, that the moment a man becomes clearly insolvent his estate belongs to his creditors, and the creditors are the parties who should be consulted as to the mode of administering and disposing of the estate. Unfortunately, the history of the law shews that partly from the apathy of creditors, and partly from other causes, great evils existed in the modes of administration formerly followed. Great changes were made in the hope of remedying these evils, but nevertheless it was found that creditors refused to avail themselves of proceedings which they fancied to be injurious to their interests. There was an enormous amount of formality and technicality, and officials were established who destroyed that property which it was their duty to protect. To remedy these evils was one of the objects of the bill of last year, and all that it was hoped to accomplish by that bill in this respect will be embodied in the present measure. Another object of that bill was to effect a reduction of the great expense incurred by the law charges of the Court of Bankruptcy. It is quite unnecessary that I should justify the introduction of a measure on this point, because the evil is universally admitted; but I shall shortly enumerate to the House some of the different sources of that expenditure, which exists in consequence of those changes that have at different times been made since 1831. On every estate brought into bankruptcy there is a considerable sum to be paid on its first introduction; then there are charges for the messengers—gentlemen who are receiving very considerable incomes for the performance of very slight duties; then there are fees paid to the auctioneer, the broker, and the accountant, fees on public sittings, registrar of meetings, and fees for sittings; the building fund, ad valorem per-centage fees to the official assignee, allowance to bankrupt for maintenance, allowances or dividend and excepted articles, and solicitors' charges. Probably it will be remembered that last year I shewed, from returns before the House, that the charges on the administration of estates in bankruptcy amounted to not less than 33 per cent. Another object of the bill of last year was to establish an effective audit, and the control and superintendence of creditors through the medium of official assignees; and also to inform creditors, by the transmission of the proper accounts, of an estate and the manner of collection. Another object of the bill of last year was the subjecting the insolvent or bankrupt, when applying for his discharge, to a proper tribunal, with the power of punishment in cases of fraudulency. All these different objects it has been my endeavour to provide for by this bill. But, before entering more particularly into that point, I may be permitted to say that in presenting this measure to the House, I present it as in my judgment the best that is attainable under the circumstances. Any one who approaches this subject with the intention of reforming the law finds the ground covered by establishments which have been again and again modified, until the Legislature has become, in regard to bankruptcy, jealous and suspicious of all further attempts at reform, and is adverse to permitting any expenditure of public money in this direction. Under these circumstances little can be done except to modify that which now exists. Undoubtedly, by giving away money under that odious name "compensation," it would be possible to build up a much simpler form of administration of this important part of the law. Whatever, too, may be done by way of enactment, a great deal is requisite for the reform of the administration of bankruptcy, which must be left to the prudence, care, and superintendence of the creditors themselves. No act of Parliament can supply that want of care, attention, and supervision; and whatever safeguards Parliament may devise, if the creditors are indifferent to their interests, if they shew a perfect disregard whether they will or will not call for accounts, and examine the conduct of their debtors, we may expect to see the frequent exhibition of things that shock the feelings of morality and integrity that ought to prevail—we may expect to see enormous defalcations, or some great and outrageous instances of commercial delinquency such as have lately been made manifest, and which have, unfortunately, remained unpunished. While, therefore, much may be done by the Legislature, much will still remain to be done by those who ought to watch over their own interests. I will first direct the attention of the House to the alterations proposed to be made in the formation of the court, and the manner of administering the law, and I will then give a sketch of the procedure in bankruptcy as it will exist under this bill if it should be passed. I will then pass on to another and separate branch of the subject, namely, the propriety of abolishing the present jurisdiction for the examination and discharge of insolvent debtors. I thought last year that it was desirable to have one law of insolvency, and to subject the trader and the non-trader to one uniform system of administering the law if they became insolvent. The House will recollect that it received last session with approbation the proposal to give a chief judge to the Court of Bankruptcy. At present the law is administered by numerous commissioners, and, as to a portion of the cases, by the county court judges. It was thought that there was great difficulty in obtaining uniformity of decisions unless there were some ready means of approaching a court of appeal. The House was unanimous in thinking that it would be proper to have a chief judge at the head of the administration of bankruptcy, to secure uniformity, certainty, and dignity. I have therefore retained that portion of the plan of last year. One of the proposals of the bill of last year was, however, to abolish at once the five London commissioners, and to place two other commissioners in their room. That proposal involved the necessity of giving to those gentlemen, for the rest of their lives, retiring annuities to the full amount of their present salaries. That proposal did not appear acceptable; and I have thought it right to continue these commissioners in precisely the same situation as at present. Their duties under the present bill will not probably be greatly augmented, considering the appointment of a chief judge, and the proportion of labour that will fall on his shoulders. That will be, at all events, for the House to determine; but I propose, in the present bill, to retain that part of the existing system, without any alteration. The bill of last year proposed the abolition of the Insolvent Debtors Court, and with it the removal and discharge of the commissioners of that court. One of the commissioners, Mr. Serjeant Murphy, has since died. Another commissioner was appointed in his place, but on the understanding that if it pleased Parliament to put an end to the court, he was not to be entitled to any compensation. At present, therefore, so far as compensation is concerned, there is but one commissioner of the Insolvent Court; and if the present scheme is carried into effect, it will leave the administration of justice, both in bankruptcy and insolvency, in the London district, in one and the same court. That district is exceedingly extensive, stretching from the extremity of Norfolk on one side to the borders of Hampshire on the other. There will, therefore, be in the London district a chief judge and five London commissioners to discharge the duties of the law of bankruptcy and insolvency. Another part of the bill proposes to augment the jurisdiction of the county courts. By the former bill power was given to the creditors to take the administration of bankruptcy from the district courts to the county courts. It provided, however, that those estates only should be transferred by consent of the creditors from the bankruptcy courts to the county courts where the assets do not exceed 1000*l*. I have since thought that no reason exists for that limit—that the creditors were able to judge for themselves on this point, and had the right to do so. I therefore propose to continue to the creditors the power of removing an estate from the Court of Bankruptcy to the county court, without any limit in point of amount. Under the former bill it was proposed that the county courts should have the right to take administrations in bankruptcy where the assets did not exceed 300*l*. It has, however, been represented to me that it is difficult to say whether the assets do or do not exceed 300*l*, and I propose that all petitions for removing bankruptcy shall be presented in the first instance to the Court of Bankruptcy, except in those limited cases where the debts of the trader do not exceed 300*l*. The facility of applying to the county courts has led to many endeavours on the part of fraudulent traders to escape from justice, and I have therefore thought it right that all petitions for adjudications of bankruptcy, except in those smaller cases where the debts do not exceed 300*l*, shall be presented in the first instance to the Court of Bankruptcy or the district court. These are the material changes in the structure of the bill, and these are all the differences that exist on this part of the subject between the bill of last session and the present. I now come to the procedure in cases of bankruptcy. I have thought it most desirable to secure the creditor of an insolvent the opportunity of determining whether he will enter the Court of Bankruptcy or not. The great fault of the present system is, that the creditor cannot get the benefit of the provisions of the Court of Bankruptcy without entering the walls of the court. There is also the further evil, that once within the walls he cannot escape until he has paid the uttermost farthing. He must remain there until the whole of the estate has been ground down, collected, and administered. But I think it right that, with the consent of a certain portion of the creditors, a man who is an honest trader, or who not being a trader is an honest debtor, shall have the opportunity of surrendering his property, and having it duly administered, without incurring the opprobrium and stigma of bankruptcy. It is necessary to deal with this part of the case with very great caution, because, if you give to the trader any protection during a certain period of time while he has solicited, or has represented that he has solicited, the consent of his creditors, you have suspended during that period the right of the creditors, and unless care be taken, the opportunity may be converted into the means of defrauding the creditor by the debtor. I have endeavoured, as well as I could, to provide a remedy for this, and, while the creditor's rights are suspended, there will nevertheless be a provision in the bill enabling the debtor's estate to be administered under a private deed, without the necessity of an adjudication of bankruptcy. I consider that a part of the utility of the measure will depend on the possibility of working this portion with convenience and success; and though, no doubt, it may on many occasions be desirable that, while the rights of the creditors are protected, the estate should be wound up without the debtor being subject to the opprobrium of passing through the Bankruptcy Court, yet I provide in the bill that the creditor or debtor may at any time pass over the boundary, and go into the Court of Bankruptcy, in order to meet any emergency or necessity, or to have a determination on any question which may arise in the administration of the estate under the trust. But supposing a petition presented for adjudication, and that the debtor is adjudicated a bankrupt, the next form of procedure by the bill is, that there should be an immediate meeting of the creditors, at which meeting it should be decided whether the administration of the estate should continue in the court by which the adjudication had been pronounced, or be transferred to any other court, as, for example, the county court. At the same time, the creditors would have the opportunity of receiving any proposal of the debtor, and of determining whether the estate should go on in bankruptcy, or be wound up by private deed. Therefore, at the very first meeting—and there would be power to call any future meeting for the same purpose—an opportunity would be afforded to the creditors of deciding which was the best mode of administering the estate. Then, with regard to the proofs of debts—a proceeding at present attended with much unnecessary expense—I have introduced, in conformity with general recommendation, a most simple mode of procedure. A written declaration, containing a statement of account, signed by the party, is, when unopposed, to be taken as proved, a penalty being attached for any false statement. Another point to which I wish to call attention is the position in which the creditors' assignees and the official assignees will be placed by the bill. All acquainted with this subject know that official assignees were introduced in 1831, in consequence of the great evils which were felt, chiefly from what I have denominated the indifference and carelessness of the creditors. The official assignee was invested with the right to receive the whole estate, and the consequence was that creditors found themselves, in their own opinion, entirely excluded from their proper position with respect to control over the administration. There has therefore been a general cry to be emancipated from the official assignees, as great as there had been previously for relief from the maladministration and neglect incidental to the former system. I have endeavoured to provide a mode of proceeding which should be something between the two propositions. I hope the House will agree with me in thinking that it is proper to leave to the creditors' assignees the right of receiving, applying, and administering the estate; but that it is most essential that there should be an efficient auditor, active inspector, and vigilant superintendent over the creditors' assignees—able to ascertain, and who would have an interest in ascertaining, that the property was received by them and taken into hand for the benefit of the creditors. I propose, therefore, by the bill, that as soon as the creditors' assignees should be appointed, the functions and duties of the official assignees should cease with respect to the collection and distribution of the property, save in one particular. I have found by an examination of the returns that small debts—debts not exceeding 10*l*.—due to bankrupts' estates, are collected by the machinery in the power of the court, with infinite economy, and therefore I propose to continue to the official assignees the power of collecting debts not exceeding 10*l*. With regard to the rest of their duties, I make it incumbent on them to require accounts from the creditors' assignees, to audit them, and send copies to the creditors. The creditors' assignee will also have to return quarterly accounts of the estate, and those quarterly balance-sheets will be audited with the aid of the official assignee. The next question is that of the discharge to be granted to the bankrupt; and here the bill which I am now seeking to introduce will be found to differ materially from the measure of last session. It has appeared to me, upon much consideration of the subject, that an obligation should be thrown upon the commissioners and upon the chief judge, whether there be any accusation by the creditors or not, of examining with care and attention the conduct of the bankrupt. Supposing, therefore, that there is no accusation by the creditors, or supposing the commissioner to whom the matter may be committed thinks it right that the conduct of the bankrupt should be brought before the chief judge, the question of the discharge will, in the London district, be brought, in the first instance, before the chief judge for decision. I propose to arm the chief judge with two kinds of authority. In the first place, I give him authority to examine the conduct of the bankrupt in all cases of misconduct not included in the list of offences which the law treats as misdemeanours. The House is probably aware that, according to the existing law, the conduct of the bankrupt may be the subject of examination by the commissioners, and that the certificate to be given to the bankrupt varies according to the opinion so formed of his conduct. There are three kinds of certificate—those of the first, those of the second, and those of the third class. The first class is a declaration that the insolvency of the bankrupt is attributable entirely to unavoidable misfortune; the second class states that it is attributable not entirely to unavoidable misfortune; while a certificate of the third class sets forth that it is attributable wholly to causes other than misfortune or accident. I am told, however, that practically the distinction between the different classes of certificates is almost wholly disregarded; that it is of little more use than if the certificates were written on so many pieces of white, or red, or pink paper. Hence I have thought it better to persevere in the proposition which I made last year, that these certificates should be wholly abolished. I do so with the more confidence now, because I believe it is necessary that something more stringent, something more definite, something the effect of which may be more severely felt, should be placed in the hands of the judge than the mere power of giving a certain description of certificate. I have, therefore, described a number of instances of misconduct which are not characterised as misdemeanours, but which are treated as grave offences, warranting the judge in refusing or suspending the order of discharge, or in committing the bankrupt to prison for any period of time not exceeding one year. Among the offences so enumerated is one which I should have been very glad to make a criminal offence if I could have found the means of defining it with that amount of accuracy with which every criminal offence ought to be defined. I mean the acquiring of fictitious capital, the trading with false capital, principally produced by the excessive use and unjust application of accommodation bills. That, in point of fact, is nothing more than a mode of obtaining the means of trading by fraudulent pretences, and ought in the excess to be punished as fraud. But the difficulty is in making criminal that which is so only in the excess, because the excess is incapable of being defined in words, although no man can hesitate about recognising it when it comes before him in actual business. It is impossible to assert that being a party to an accommodation bill shall, of itself, be an offence; yet no man of any information on the subject can hesitate to say that such a system of trading by accommodation bills as that which has been exhibited in the public journals, in connexion with a recent case of bankruptcy, amounts to one of the worst description of offences. I have not hesitated, therefore, to give the chief judge, who will be a judge of the highest rank, the power of inflicting a sentence of imprisonment for twelve months in those cases of delinquency which are not included in the list of offences amenable to the criminal law. I do so with less hesitation, because the existing law gives the power to a creditor, if he pleases, of inflicting a greater amount of imprisonment. The law as it at present stands is characterised, probably, by as much inhumanity, and at the same time inefficiency and impolicy, as any law that could be devised. If the commissioner suspends a certificate, or refuses it for any limited time, during that period any creditor may apply to the commissioner for a certificate of his debt, and upon that certificate he has a right to commit the bankrupt to prison. Then, at the end of the imprisonment, which is an imprisonment for a limited period, any other creditor may proceed against the bankrupt in the same way, and subject him to a similar incarceration. I think that, if the delinquency of the bankrupt is such that it is just to expose him to the penalty of imprisonment, that penalty ought not to be left at the caprice of any creditor who might be prompted by malice or a vindictive feeling; while, on the other hand, I am equally of opinion that it is not fair that the creditors should be made the agents and instruments of inflicting a criminal sentence. Such a sentence, to have any effect in the way of deterring from similar crimes, ought to come from a judge of the highest dignity. I, therefore, propose to take away the power of imprisonment now given to the creditors, and, in cases where the judge shall be of opinion that the order of discharge ought to be refused or suspended, to give him the power of inflicting the amount of imprisonment I have mentioned. I have also thought it right that the same judge—viz. the chief judge—should be armed with authority to try the bankrupt for any offence of which he may be accused, because in handing the bankrupt over from the Court of Bankruptcy to a criminal tribunal there is not only very considerable difficulty in causing proofs of the offence to accompany the accusation, so as to enable them to be brought forward in the manner required by any ordinary criminal court, but there is great injustice in subjecting the estate to all the expense and delay incident to that description of prosecution. I have thought it right, therefore, as we propose to place at the head of the Court of Bankruptcy a judge of the highest rank and character, the equal of any of the judges of Westminster-hall, that such judge should have the power of administering this part of the criminal jurisdiction. The bill provides that, if the bankrupt desires to be tried by a jury, he shall be tried by a jury in the ordinary manner; but that if he does not desire to be so tried, then the judge is to examine his conduct; the commissioner who has had the immediate prosecution of the matter sitting as the assessor of the chief judge. The final sentence is to proceed from the court so constituted, no appeal being allowed to any other tribunal. From the decisions of the commissioners in the country, and county court judges, an appeal to the chief judge appears to be desirable, but from the sentence of the chief judge in this matter I think it right that there should be no appeal. I think these provisions are not more stringent than the absolute necessity of the case requires. I hold that justice should be administered in a manner in which humanity and consideration may be united with necessary severity, and so as to operate more efficiently than the present system. I have mentioned to the House the procedure applicable entirely to the case of traders. It was part of the proposition of last year, that the non-trader also should be brought within the area of the same tribunal. That was a proposition which, I believe, as far as general discussion has gone, has received the approval of, I may say, nearly all who have attended to the subject. The true policy of the bankrupt law is, I believe, that every species of encouragement should be given to a debtor, the moment he finds himself in a state of insolvency, to do that which justice requires, namely, to divide his estate equally among his creditors; but I must beg you also to observe that, with the exception of the trader, in the case of the non-trader the whole tendency of your law as at present established is to produce the very opposite result. You admit of execution against the person of the debtor; you admit the debtor being consigned to prison on that execution—for what purpose? You cannot for one moment say that he is sent to prison for punishment. You have not been administering the criminal law at all. He is sent to prison at the pleasure of a creditor. Well, the creditor has become his creditor by his own voluntary act. To every debt, in that sense of the word, there are two parties—the man who contracts it, and the man who permits it to be contracted. The creditor, of his own accord, willingly gives credit—to what had he the right of trusting at the time he gave it? He trusted, of course, to the solvency and means of the individual. In the very nature of the contract, it is impossible to suppose that the power of consigning the debtor to prison ought to be regarded as one of the natural rights of the creditor. Consigning the debtor to prison cannot be justified on any other consideration than this, that it is a means of compelling the debtor to give up his property for payment of his debts. But if you can accomplish the same thing without imprisonment, the imprisonment would be without reason to justify it. The imprisonment of the debtor is undoubtedly the means of rendering the debtor useless to himself and a burthen to the community. To the creditor it produces no good; to the state at large it is an unmitigated evil. The debtor is demoralised; he is in a state of idleness and depravity frequently while in gaol; he comes out of gaol a worse man than he entered it. The whole process, therefore, is neither more nor less than a process of unmitigated evil, unless you say it is effectual as a preventive to men going into debt. But I say you are not justified in imposing any such law with a view to prevent that consequence when men only get into debt with the consent of their creditors; and if the creditor consent, the act of the creditor entitles him to nothing more than the aid of the law, in the most expeditious manner, to get at the property of the debtor, and divide that property among his creditors. But here, again, you give every temptation to fraudulent preferences; you stimulate the debtor to do that which in bankruptcy the judge would stigmatize with the imputation of fraud. I cannot illustrate more forcibly the opinions that have prevailed on this subject, and dictated by good policy as well as humanity and justice, than by taking the liberty of reading one or two passages from the reports of various commissioners who have considered the subject. In the report of the Common-law Commissioners in 1832 the result of the law is thus accurately described—"The practical effect of the law of arrest on final process, combined with the insolvent law, is the imprisonment of numbers, merely to be discharged without opposition at the end of a few weeks. The consequence is misery, waste of funds, and multiplied frauds and perjuries. While no benefit arises to the creditor, the arrest, imprisonment, and expense are ruinous to the debtor. In short, the ordinary consequence is disappointment and loss to the creditor, destruction to the debtor." I say this is a correct view of the case; statistical returns prove it in the strongest way by the number who are committed to prison, the short time they remain there, and then are discharged; not one estate in 250 profiting thereby. You are bound, by the principle of your law of debtor and creditor, to give the creditor the most available remedy; but it so happens that the most available remedies to the creditor are those which are most consistent with humanity and justice to the debtor, and the general benefit to the State at large. You tell the insolvent debtor that he shall be released and discharged on surrendering his property—why do you make it a necessary condition that he shall go to prison before he surrenders his property? You have felt the injustice, and have modified the operation, of these laws by various acts, which have had in them, perhaps, more humanity than consistency, and which were not quite impartial. You will recollect the act of Parliament that was passed for an object I will not stop to explain, and which is commonly denominated the "Gentleman's Act." That is an act by which, in reality, the insolvent may get the benefit of bankruptcy without going to prison. The Legislature, in passing it, at the same time condemned the general system, because it has by that and other protection acts in effect declared that if a man will communicate with his creditors, and get the assent of a certain number, and surrender his property, his person shall be free from arrest. Now, all I desire, for the benefit of non-traders, is this, that the law should give them an opportunity of at once surrendering their property, and, upon that surrender and free discovery, that they shall be protected from arrest. This is the first thing, therefore, that is proposed, and for the benefit, I trust, of the non-traders. I will venture to add one or two more extracts from the report I before referred to, in order to vindicate the proposition I have laid down. In another part of the same report I find this statement:—"Thousands are every year imprisoned and discharged, not only at great pecuniary cost, but at a moral expense infinitely more detrimental to the interests of society." Another report was made in the year 1840 by the commissioners appointed to consider the bankruptcy and insolvency laws. The report is signed by Mr. Justice Erskine, previously chief judge of the court of review, Mr. Evans, Mr. Fonblanque, and Mr. Holroyd, commissioners of the court of insolvency, and Mr. William Crawford, Mr. Wynn Ellis, Mr. Benjamin Hawes, junior, Mr. G. C. Glyn, and Mr. John Horsley Palmer—a combination of authorities of the highest character. There are two passages I would read. "It appears to us," the commissioners say, "that to unite the jurisdiction in matters of bankruptcy and insolvency would, upon principle, tend much to benefit the public; but this benefit cannot, we think, be obtained without placing all insolvent estates under the administration of one uniform system of law. We can perceive no good reason why the estate of one debtor (a trader), who is unable to pay his debts in full, should be administered in a different manner from that of another debtor, not a trader, under the same disability." I cannot but think, therefore, that you must arrive at the conclusion that the greatest injustice is, under the present system, done to the non-trader, and the greatest injury inflicted upon the creditor; because, as matters now stand, the former is led to submit to considerable sacrifices from time to time, frequently even to commit fraudulent acts, in order to evade the penalty of imprisonment; so that, instead of deeming it to be his interest to make an honest surrender of his property to his creditors, every species of inducement is held out to him to do that which under a just and politic administration of the law of debtor and creditor might not occur. That hundreds and thousands of debtors should be imprisoned only, as it would seem, to keep up a costly tribunal for the purpose of their discharge from confinement would appear to be the very extreme of folly. If then, the case be as I state, it becomes the interest of all parties to place the law of insolvency upon the same footing as that of bankruptcy. It has, however, been made manifest to me since last year that some degree of odium attaches to the word "bankruptcy" in general acceptance, and that that circumstance would be likely considerably to detract from the beneficial results which I anticipated from the changes in the law which I then proposed. I have, therefore, been desirous of embodying in the present bill words which should be certain and unmistakable, as defining the tests of insolvency as applied to non-traders; so that the law of bankruptcy might be brought into operation in such cases upon the most distinct evidence of general inability to meet one's just claims. Now, I think the House will agree with me in the opinion that one of the greatest subjects of reproach in connexion with cases of this description with which we have to deal is that which results from the habit which exists among men who happen to be involved in debt of withdrawing their property from this country, and seeking a residence in some part of the continent, where they may enjoy it, thus defrauding their creditors of that which ought to be distributed among them. We are all perfectly well aware that there are abroad certain localities which are well known as being the places of refuge of English debtors; and that being so, I have made the first test of insolvency in the present bill the absconding from the country with the deliberate intent of evading one's just creditors, and the remaining abroad with the same object. But now comes the question, which shall be the overt act which shall meet with general acceptance as evidence of the malus animus to defraud? In dealing with that question, in which you have to collect from the acts of the debtor the proofs of the animus by which his absence from the country is influenced, I have been desirous to render it necessary that a certain process should be gone through. I should require a petition against him to be served at the last place of abode of the debtor, as under the existing system the courts of chancery and common law are empowered to demand in the case of a bankrupt, so that it would be impossible for any man to be declared an insolvent upon the ground of fraudulent absence from the kingdom without having a fair opportunity of shewing what is about to be done with respect to him, of entering an appearance against the petition, and of proving that he in reality was animated by no fraudulent intention in taking up his residence abroad. The next test of bankruptcy which I would make applicable to the non-trader is the fact of a creditor having obtained a judgment against him in accordance with the ordinary process of law or equity, and being unable to find him to enforce that judgment, and I propose that under those circumstances an opportunity should be afforded him of appearing to answer the demand, and of giving either satisfactory security to the creditor, or proving that he was not liable to be called upon to liquidate the claim made upon him. If that be not done you will, I think, agree with me that a criterion of general insolvency is furnished, which makes it the duty of the debtor to deliver up his property for the payment of his liabilities, and which renders it incumbent upon the framers of the law to enforce that surrender. Another test of insolvency is the fact that the debtor, being a non-trader, has been arrested on final process, and is placed in prison. Every honourable member at all acquainted with this subject must be aware that it has not been unusual for persons so situated to prefer to remain in gaol, and enjoy their property there, to giving up that property to be distributed among their creditors. The most absurd part of the English law with respect to this particular point is this—that it seems to assume that when you have got the body of your debtor you have obtained satisfaction of your debt, thus reminding one of the doctrine, attrib-ted to the Roman law, of sanctioning the division piecemeal of a debtor among his creditors. The test of insolvency which I have last mentioned may be made the occasion of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy being presented against a non-trader, and the result would be that his estate would be administered on the same principle as that of a trader. Touching upon this part of the question, we are naturally led to ask the very important question, whether in altering the law of bankruptcy we ought to import into the amended system that principle of the law of insolvency which makes the future estate of the debtor liable for his debts, or whether it would not be more advisable to extend to the non-trader the benefits of that humane principle of the bankruptcy law which gives the debtor an unqualified and general discharge for the future, upon his giving up the entire property in his possession to satisfy the claims which exist against him. For my own part, I confess that I do not think a man, if he chooses to give credit, is entitled, morally, or upon grounds of good policy, to anything more than an equitable distribution of all the means in the possession of his debtor at the time when he gives him credit. It is not, it seems to me, a just or a politic course to take so to legislate as to induce a creditor to speculate on the future prospects of the person whom he trusts. We know that in equity all bargains with expectant heirs, upon the security of their expectations, and all contracts relating to future acquisitions of property, are regarded as unjust; and I feel therefore confident that the House will be of opinion that a debtor, having once honestly delivered up to his creditors all the property which he possesses, ought not to be liable to be pursued by them through life, and to be called upon to surrender that which he may afterwards secure to satisfy their claims. That is a principle on which the House will have to decide. I have the greatest possible confidence in a general committee of this House. I know of no more searching tribunal for the examination of such a question; and this, as well as all the main provisions of this bill, I shall submit unreservedly to discussion in committee, accepting altogether that which its wisdom and sense of justice may approve. I must, however, tell you that in that part of the measure which deals with the orders of discharge of bankrupts, whether traders or non-traders, I have given to the chief judge, in case of any delinquency, the power of annexing to such orders of discharge conditions affecting future-acquired property. It will be for you to determine the prudence and propriety of that course; but the bill proposes, as a penalty upon the bankrupt trader or non-trader, that in cases coming within just censure, such censure shall involve the liability of future-acquired property. Now, it may be asked whether this bill goes the length of totally abolishing imprisonment for debt? My answer to that is, that I regret it does not. I have hesitated on this point from a fear that if I had pledged myself to such a proposition I might not have found it accepted by this House. But I will tell you what I have done, and which in reality will, I trust, arrive at the same result, although it is not the same thing in name; neither is that boldly avowed which reason, justice, and policy appear to me to demand. The course adopted by the bill is this: in the first place, every pauper debtor who, on account of his poverty, cannot petition for an adjudication of bankruptcy against himself, has the power of presenting a petition to a county court, and of presenting it at the expense of a fund provided under the 33 Geo. 3, for promoting the discharge of pauper debtors. That is one of the modes by which I hope to relieve the goals of some of their present occupants. But another mode is this: the gaoler, by a provision of the bill, is required to make out, on the first day of every month, a return of all prisoners in his custody for pure debt, or rather simply on account of debt, and to forward this return to the chief judge in the London district, or to the commissioner in any country district of bankruptcy. On the receipt of that return notice is to be sent by the clerk to the execution creditor and the detaining creditor of every such person; and on the expiration of ten, or not more than twenty days from the date of the return, a registrar will examine every prisoner, whether there be a petition or not. The registrar will have power to make an adjudication; that is, to make an order vesting the estate of the prisoner in the official assignee, and, if he thinks fit, to grant the prisoner an order of protection; that is, a qualified discharge. When that machinery is in operation, I believe it will be impossible for any man to remain in prison, simply on the ground of debt, for a longer period than from fourteen to twenty days. And, if that be so, I think it will follow that no creditor would be willing to commit his debtor to prison; for he pays a considerable sum for that privilege or source of enjoyment, if it be such, and he would hardly avail himself of it when his debtor would be released from prison in the manner I have described. The House will recollect that prisoners for debt in this country are now divided into two classes. One of these classes, and by far the most numerous, are those who are imprisoned by the orders of the county court judges: for there is a species of imprisonment which must be called penal, not being for pure debt, inflicted by the sentence of a county court judge, or of a commissioner of bankruptcy, in cases of small debts, which are found to have been contracted either under circumstances of fraud, when the debtor had no probable means or expectation of being able to pay, or under some other species of falsehood or delinquency. Now, of course, it would be very wrong to interfere with that description of criminal imprisonment, and therefore I do not propose that the registrar who attends for this gaol delivery of debtors should have any power to release persons so committed to custody. But for pure debt, for debt unaccompanied by these circumstances of fraud or reproach, no man will be permitted to remain in prison, but, whether he will or no, will be discharged, and his property, if he has any, taken from him, and made available for the benefit of his creditors at large. These, then, are the principal provisions, some of which were included in the former bill. I have only to add that, connected with the additions made to the former measure, there is this important circumstance: I have mentioned my great desire to facilitate the process by which debtors, without incurring the reproach of bankruptcy, should be enabled to surrender their property for division among their creditors. But it repeatedly happens that the debtor cannot accomplish this, because he is unable to ascertain who are his creditors at the time, so as to obtain the assent of the required majority for a composition or arrangement. Every trader is probably liable upon promissory notes or bills of exchange which are circulating about, it may be in foreign parts, and the holders of which cannot be discovered in a short period of time. I have, therefore, introduced this provision, that if the debtor obtains the required majority of those creditors who can be ascertained, and is willing to make the trust deed or deed of assignment run in a very simple form, it shall be as effectual and complete a discharge and protection to him as if he had gained the assent of all his creditors. The simple form in which the deed shall run is to this effect, that he conveys all his estate and effects to certain trustees, to be by them collected, applied, and administered exactly as if he had been regularly adjudged a bankrupt. With regard also to deeds of arrangement after bankruptcy, I have incorporated some provisions from the Scotch system, in order to facilitate a change from the process in bankruptcy to proceedings by private arrangement. Such is the measure which I submit to this House for its approval. It must be recollected that we have at present a most artificial system. It is impossible, as I have already said, to sweep that system entirely away, and substitute for it a perfectly new one. All we pretend to do is to remedy its worst defects, to remove its undoubted grievances, and provide the means whereby, without incurring the expense of all its present formal modes of proceeding, the creditors may easiest obtain the property of the debtor for the satisfaction of their just claims. If these provisions work well and satisfactorily, I venture to anticipate that the charges of bankruptcy, where bankruptcy exists, will be diminished by one-half; but I hope that bankruptcy will seldom be resorted to, and that only in case of absolute fraud and delinquency. I hope that the mode of administering debtors' estates by private arrangement, incorporating as it does all the principles and appliances of the law of bankruptcy, will be the general rule, and the formal process of bankruptcy the exception. You cannot have a better illustration of the present unfortunate state of the law than is presented by the contrast between the number of cases of bankruptcy and the cases of composition. It proves to you this great truth, that whenever year law is not in harmony with the exigencies of society, it has the effect of driving the people out of their courts of justice into the by-ways which are still open to them, in order to secure these advantages which they ought to be able to obtain in a more legitimate manner. The cases of composition amount to between 8000 and 10,000 a year; while the bankruptcies and arrangements under the control of the courts seldom exceed 1000 or 1100. This only shews the great preference among creditors for private arrangements, even although, under the present state of the law, the trustee in such a case cannot have the expeditious remedy which this bill will afford, and although the only mode of securing the due performance of the trust is by a resort, on the part of the creditors, to the Court of Chancery against the trustee. In spite of these disadvantages, creditors have preferred to incur all the inconveniences of deeds of private arrangement. Not that the law of bankruptcy itself is wrong, but that there are impediments to its proper administration. I have thought it right to address myself to aid that which appears to be the general impression among the commercial community, and which in the abstract nature of things must be most desirable; for if a debtor comes and surrenders his property, and is willing to account, what do you want with a bankruptcy court? It is quite sufficient that there should be a facile remedy to compel the administration and performance of a trust when it is once created. Upon that ground, therefore, I trust that that portion of the bill which applies the law of bankruptcy to deeds of trust and composition, and admits of the parties to them being placed in the same relative position, and subject to the same jurisdiction, as if there had been actual bankruptcy, as if the trustees were assignees, and as if the creditors claiming under the deed had proved in bankruptcy—I say, I trust and believe that portion of the bill would be found most useful and efficient. It is upon that portion of the bill that, as a question of finance, I hope to meet with the approval of the House. At present the House is aware that the Court of Bankruptcy is in constitution self-supporting. I do not propose to interfere with that principle, except in two particulars—one with respect to the salary of the chief judge, which I propose shall, like the salaries of other judges employed in the administration of public justice, be paid out of the public revenue; and the other is the unfortunate portion upon which the former bill in a great measure suffered shipwreck. In the former bill I proposed, in conformity with the recommendation of the commissioners, and in conformity with repeated suggestions of former commissions, that the compensations granted in 1831 to officers who were then discharged from their duties, and which compensations were charged upon the bankruptcy fund—most unjustly, as I think, because it made future generations of creditors pay for the faults of the law, and the improper mode of its administration previously existing—I proposed that those compensations should be thrown upon the Consolidated Fund. The House did not agree to that proposition, but did, I think, agree that the compensation should be defrayed by annual votes of Parliament. I hope gentlemen who listen to me will understand that my bill creates no compensation at all; I am only dealing with compensations given nearly thirty years since, and I am only acting in accordance with common justice, in order that we may accomplish that result, without which all reforms are idle—namely, the introduction into the administration of the law of bankruptcy of the principles of economy and cheapness which are absolutely necessary; for if you tax creditors to the extent of 33 per cent., as at present, you compel them to resort to other remedies, rather than seek a court of justice for relief.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 23, 1861.

AN able conveyancer has forwarded to us for publication a proposed form for the settlement of chattels as heir-looms, to which we wish to call the attention of our readers, as the subject is one of considerable interest to the conveyancing branch of the Profession, and not without its importance to the public, whose enjoyment and amusement are often much increased by the ownership of a valuable collection of heir-looms being united to the ownership of a family estate. It would be no small loss to the public if the collections of works of art at Chatsworth and other similar places, the liberal owners of which are in the habit of allowing free access to visitors, were, through some defect in conveyancing, to become separated from the mansions, and perhaps dispersed or sold.

The subject is elaborately discussed by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in Lord Scarsdale v. Curzon (1 Johns. & H. 40; 6 Jur., N. S., part. 1, p. 209), where his Honor points out that the forms in common use are more or less objectionable. The objection to the most usual form of trust is, that under it the heir-looms vest absolutely in the first tenant in tail who attains twenty-one. This being so, unless a resettlement of them is made, the absolute reversionary interest in them, subject to the prior life interest, will, in the event of his dying before his estate tail comes into possession, devolve to his personal representatives, so that an immediate severance between the title to the estate and the title to the chattels takes place. On the other hand, if the vesting be postponed (which, no doubt, within due limits, may be done) until the compound event of majority and possession happens in the person of some tenant in tail, the chattels cannot be comprised in a resettlement of the estate made by a tenant for life and an adult tenant in tail in remainder, since the interest of such tenant in tail in the chattels will be only contingent.

The form proposed by our correspondent aims at meeting both these objections in a way which seems well calculated to remove the principal imperfection incident to the modes which have hitherto been adopted of settling chattels to go along with real estate. With a view to meet the objection arising from the premature acquisition of an absolute reversionary interest, which takes place under the form most commonly in use, the vesting of the absolute interest is suspended, not merely until a tenant in tail by purchase attains twenty-one, but for the furthest period that the law allows—viz. until the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of the survivor of the several persons who are made tenants for life of the real estate under the instrument by which the settlement is made; and on the determination of that period the absolute interest is then conferred upon the person or persons then entitled to the inheritance.

In order to obviate the objection above adverted to, that such a lengthened suspension of vesting prevents the making a resettlement so soon as the first tenant in tail attains twenty-one—a step which is so usual and desirable in the case of large landed properties—it is proposed to adopt the expedient of subjecting the chattels to a general power of appointment, exercisable by the persons or person for the time being competent and of positive ability to disentail and re-settle the estate, the period for the exercise of such power being limited to the lives of the tenants for life, and the survivors and survivor of them, and the period of twenty-one years from the death of the survivor, so as to avoid any question as to the power being void for remoteness.

The proposed form appears to us to be framed with great care and skill, and to be well adapted to attain its object—that of settling chattels so as to go along with real estate as far as the law will allow, and at the same time giving to the persons beneficially interested the same power of dealing with the chattels as they have of dealing with the land. The wish of settlers who desire the insertion of clauses making chattels go as heir-looms is no doubt to make the chattels, so far as the law will allow, an accessory to, and as it were a part of, the real estate, so as to follow its devolutions, in the same way as if they were affixed to the freehold, and formed part of the inheritance. The full gratification of this wish, which cannot, we think, be considered either unreasonable in itself or in any way opposed to public policy, is impossible while the rules of law as to freeholds and chattels remain as they are; but the proposed form seems to us to go further towards effectuating it than any form we have seen. The framing a new clause in a satisfactory form, and well adapted to general use, is, however, as every draftsman well knows, a matter of great difficulty, and any of our readers who would consider and point out any particulars in which the proposed scheme of limitations may be objectionable, or susceptible of improvement, would thereby give valuable assistance towards attaining the object sought by its framers—that of arriving at a set of trusts which may be safely and satisfactorily adopted in practice, as regards heir-looms, and may, with some alterations in language, be used with equal advantage in the case of leaseholds forming part of a settled estate.

The proposed form is as follows:—"Upon and for such trusts, intents, and purposes as the persons [or, as the case may be, the single person] for the time being of capacity in respect of interest, and of ability in respect of age, to make such a disposition of the said mansion-house called A. as will operate to bar or destroy the estates tail therein hereby created; or such of them as may be subsisting, and all remainders, limitations, estates, and interests depending or expectant upon such subsisting estates or estate tail, shall at any time, or from time to time (not being beyond the expiration of a term of twenty-one years, computed from the day of the decease of the last survivor of the several persons hereby made tenants for their respective lives of the said mansion-house), by any deed or deeds, direct or appoint; and in default thereof, and in the meantime subject thereto, upon trust to permit the said chattels to go and be held and enjoyed, so far as the rules of law and equity will permit, and in the nature of heir-looms, along or together with the said mansion-house, by the person or persons for the time being entitled to the possession thereof under or by virtue of the uses hereby limited; and, subject as aforesaid, upon further trust to assign the said chattels absolutely unto the person (or, if more than one, unto and equally, as tenants in common, between or among the several persons) who at the expiration of such term of twenty-one years as last aforesaid shall (or, if this settlement were then continuing in full force, would), under or by virtue of the uses hereby limited, be entitled in possession to the said mansion-house for an estate in tail or fee-simple, as the case may be."

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL pleads the ill-reception of his first Bankruptcy Bill in excuse for the badness of his second attempt. But the plea, if it implies that he has to satisfy an assembly which is impatient of a good measure, is not supported by the evidence. The bill of last year was well received on its introduction, because the House of Commons trusted that would justify the description given of it by the Attorney-General. They welcomed it because it professed to consolidate the bankrupt law, and to subject the estates of all insolvent debtors, whether traders or not, to one uniform system of distribution. They rejected the bill when they discovered that it was so full of blunders and defects as to prove at once the incompetency of the draftsman and the disgraceful negligence of the public officer who gave it the sanction of his approval, and that the clauses for extending the bankrupt law to non-traders had been framed with so little consideration as to apply the same tests of insolvency to private persons as to traders. The Commons, anxious to pass a consolidating and amending measure, had nothing of the kind before them, and they could neither undertake to frame such a measure in committee, nor trust the Attorney-General to do it for them. The difficulty which the Attorney-General feels, in passing a consolidating bill, lies in his own incapacity to select efficient draftsmen, and to supervise the work.

A large portion of the present bill is composed of clauses taken from the former one, freed from some outrageous blunders which were pointed out by critics in and out of the House. It is still, in spite of the amendments which have been forced upon its promoter, ill-contrived and ill-expressed in its details. The objections to the judicial establishment and the subordinate machinery provided for the administration of the bankrupt law, and particularly to the transfer of the administration of bankrupts' estates from the official assignees to the nominees of creditors, were sufficiently pointed out in the debate on Monday last. We trust that these objections, the demerits of the bill in matters of detail and expression, and the consideration, that though the bankrupt and insolvent law greatly need consolidation and amendment, there is no urgency for a fragmentary measure of questionable policy, which would increase the existing confusion, will be sufficient to secure the rejection of the bill; and then, perhaps, the Attorney-General will be persuaded to resign to others the part of law reformer, which he has assumed with very slender qualifications, and hitherto performed with infinite discredit.

ERRATUM.—The signature to the letter on the Constitution of the Slave States, in our last number, should have been "H. J. Roby."

In our last number (ante, p. 57), the able article in a former number, intitled "The Franchise in the Slave States of America," together with the comment on Mr. Roby's letter respecting it, are by mistake attributed to the Editor of THE JURIST. They both proceed from an old and valued correspondent.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY—ANDERSON'S CASE.

AT a meeting of the Juridical Society held on Monday, the 4th February, 1861, R. P. Collier, Esq., Q. C. M. P., in the chair, a paper was read by the Hon. George Denman, M. P., on the question, "Is the Government of the United States of America entitled, under the Ashburton Treaty, to claim the extradition of the fugitive Anderson?" A debate ensued, which was adjourned, and resumed on Monday, the 18th inst., W. M. Best, Esq., in the chair. The following is a summary of the proceedings:—

Mr. Denman read his paper. The early part of it was devoted to an elaborate discussion of the question, whether, independent of treaty, a right to claim the extradition of criminals exists by the law of nations, which, after a full examination of the authorities, Mr. Denman resolved in the negative. After premising that all extradition treaties should be construed strictly, Mr. Denman next proceeded to contend that the effect of the proviso in the Ashburton Treaty is, that the question, whether a party is liable to extradition, depends on whether the act he did is a crime by the law of the country where he is found. In the present instance the party was found in Canada; and as by the law of that country slavery cannot exist there, and the offence with which he was charged is dependent altogether on the institution of slavery, no claim for his extradition could be maintained. This construction he considered fortified by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 120; and the Canadian Extradition Act, 22 Vict. c. 89.

Mr. Collier was of opinion that extradition treaties were intended solely to meet the case of persons who offended against the law of nature and nations. The construing the term "murder," in the present treaty, according to the law of Missouri, would lead to absurdity. Suppose the law of that State had constituted it murder for a slave, even in his own defence, to kill a white man; or for a negress to kill a white man who was attempting to ravish her, England would be obliged to give up the party as a murderer.

Mr. Fitzjames Stephen said, that, much against his inclination, he found himself compelled to conclude that the claim to extradition in this case was well founded. All crime was in its nature local, and consequently to be determined by the law of the place where it is committed. It was useless to talk about the law of nature, that expression being nothing more than a collective name for a number of theories of various writers. The proviso in the treaty must be understood with reference to proof, not to law—i. e. the crime must be defined by the law of the place where it was committed, but the proof of it by the place where the party is found. The English Vagrant Act constituted a species of slavery; still he considered that the Americans would not be justified in refusing to give up a man who here slew another who was in the act of attempting to arrest him as a vagrant. He referred to the treaty of extradition between France and England embodied in the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, in corroboration of his view, and observed, that if England was dissatisfied with the treaty, she had power under the eleventh article to put an end to it at any time.

Mr. W. M. Best was of opinion that the word "murder" in the treaty must be construed according to the meaning of that word in, and the general principles of, international law. He referred to the rules for the interpretation of treaties, &c. laid down by Grotius (book 2, c. 16), and adopted by Wheaton (International Law, 355, 6th ed.) and other writers, among which are the two following:—First, that words in a treaty may be read in a sense more limited than their natural sense, when adhering precisely to the letter would impose on a contracting party either the onus of doing some act in violation of divine or natural law, or a burthen too grievous and intolerable. According to both Wheaton (International Law, 179, note (a), 6th ed.) and Ortolan (Règles Internationales de la Mer, vol. 1, p. 346, 2nd ed.), extradition treaties are only meant for acts regarded by common consent as grave crimes, and not for offences of a political or purely local nature. The present treaty included charges of "piracy," and it would be absurd to suppose that under this word England could claim the extradition of a person engaged in the slave trade, which is piracy by her law, but not by the law of nations.

Mr. Westlake cited several authorities in support of the opinion of Mr. Denman, that there is no right of extradition independent of treaty. In answer to Mr. Stephen, he observed, that although the authority to punish crime is local, it is otherwise with respect to the definition of the crime itself.

Mr. F. S. Reilly was of opinion that the question rested on the Extradition Acts, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, and 22 Vict. c. 89 (Canadian), and not on the treaty; and if so, the term "murder" here must be understood with reference to English law. He contended that a minister of state was not bound to give up a person, even though his case came within the letter of the statute, but he was bound to take all the circumstances into consideration. Suppose, for instance, "adultery" had been included in the treaty, England would not be justified in claiming the extradition of a Mormon who had married several wives.

Mr. C. Hopwood, on the contrary, thought that the construction of the provisions of this treaty was for courts of justice, and not for ministers of state.

Mr. F. M. Nichols considered that crime must be understood with reference to the law of the country where the party is found. Whether a particular act affecting property is a crime depends on the way in which title to property is conferred in the country where the act is done. Suppose a slave in Missouri were to rob his master of his horse and arms in order to effect his escape, that act could not be construed robbery without recognising the existence of slavery. It is only by the comity of nations that the laws of one country are recognised in another; and this is never done when those laws are in violation of natural justice or decorum.

Mr. Vernon Lushington thought that the crimes designated in the treaty were meant to be such as are palpably crimes in all civilised countries.

Mr. A. Cohen agreed nearly with Mr. Reilly. It was a well-known rule in courts of equity, that if a contract did not express the intention of both parties it might be rectified. In international contracts the same object was obtained by putting a liberal construction upon them.

Mr. C. Clark urged, that, as this treaty was not ratified until after its provisions had been discussed in the Legislatures of the two countries respectively, each party must be taken to have ratified the treaty with knowledge of the views stated in those discussions, and consequently of the views of the other party relative to its intended effect. The language of the English ministers in the Legislature of that period clearly shewed that the treaty was not meant to apply to a case like the present.

Mr. Denman, in an able reply, maintained his original views. He observed that the society should discuss the question as jurists, not as statesmen. The proviso in the present treaty was evidently copied, word for word, from a similar treaty between the same countries in 1795. There were few reported as-stances of extradition under either act, some of those which arose in America having gone off on the by-point of whether the claim of extradition had been made by duly authorised persons. A case occurred at Bow-street, before Mr. Hall, in which America claimed a man on a charge of robbery, under circumstances that by English law only amounted to larceny by a servant, and the man was not given up.

It is not the practice of this society to put to the vote the questions discussed there.

ON PAYMENT OF MONEY INTO COURT IN ACTIONS OF DETINUE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Mr. Stephen, in his edition of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, seems to have fallen into an error as to the effect which that statute will have on the power of paying money into court in actions of detinue; and it may be worth while to point out and correct that error.

The 25th section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, so far as concerns the action of detinue, is to the following effect:—

"It shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court or a judge, and upon such terms as they or he shall think fit, to pay money into court to answer the claim of the plaintiff, to the value of the goods alleged to be detained."

Now, Mr. Stephen's note to the above section is, so far as regards the present question, as follows:—

"As to actions of detinue, see Crossfield v. Such (8 Exch. 159), from which it would appear that the present section is only declaratory of the law with regard to actions for detaining goods. It will, however, be remarked that leave must be obtained before paying money into court in actions for detainer. In other actions (where it can be paid in at all) no such leave is required, unless in the case of there being more than one defendant in the action. As far, therefore, as detinue is concerned, the present provision is a restraining rather than an enabling enactment; for, if Crossfield v. Such be law, a defendant in detinue might (under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852) have paid money into court without leave."

On looking at Crossfield v. Such, it will be found that the point actually decided was, that, as to the detaining of the goods, the defendant might plead that he had redelivered them to the plaintiff; and as to the damage caused by the detention, he might plead payment of money into court. It must, however, be admitted, as a correct inference from Baron Parke's judgment, that then the defendant could, even as to the detaining of the chattel, plead payment into court. But it is important to observe, that Crossfield v. Such was decided in the year 1852, and that it was expressly decided five years afterwards, in Allan v. Dunn (1 H. & Norm. 572), that in an action of detinue the defendant cannot plead payment into court in satisfaction of the value of the goods; the judgment in this last case being entirely founded on the provisions contained in the 78th section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854. This section merely enables the plaintiff, in an action of detinue, unless the court or a judge should otherwise order, to distrain till the defendant should render the chattel, and deprives the defendant of the option, which he formerly had, of retaining the chattel upon paying the assessed value. It was, therefore, held by the Court of Exchequer, that to allow the defendant in detinue to pay money into court in satisfaction of the value of the chattel would be virtually to repeal the above section, inasmuch as it would have the effect of giving back to the defendant the very option which it was the object of that section to take away from him.

It is, then, clear that at the time of the passing of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, the defendant could not plead payment into court as a defence to the detaining of a chattel; and this is exactly what the 25th section of that statute enables him to do by leave of the court or a judge. Moreover, a very little consideration will shew the wisdom of this enactment; for suppose the chattel, which is alleged to be detained, to be destroyed or lost, in such case it is clear that, under the 78th section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, the plaintiff would be prevented by the court from continuing to distrain the defendant, by his lands and chattels, until he should do what, according to the hypothesis, it would be impossible for him to do—namely, until he should render the chattel. In such and similar cases, which were no doubt in the contemplation of the framers of the last Common-law Procedure Act, it will save useless expense and needless annoyance to allow the defendant at once, by leave of the court or a judge, to pay money into court.

It may be added, that there is nothing in the above-cited section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, which has any reference to the damage sustained by reason of the detention, the section only speaking of "the plaintiff's claim to the value of the goods detained;" and the defendant may, therefore, as he formerly might, plead payment into court as to the damage caused by the detention.

It may not be uninteresting to observe, that, applying the principle of Allan v. Dunn to the 2nd section of the Mercantile-law Amendment Act, 1856, it would seem that, in an action on a contract to deliver specific goods, the defendant ought not, at least without leave of the court, to be permitted to plead payment of money into court.

Reviews.

The Common-law Procedure Acts of 1852, 1854, and 1860; with Notes, and the Forms and Rules; to which are prefixed or appended all the Acts (or portions of Acts) relating to Common-law Procedure, or the Trial of Issues of Fact in the Courts of Common Law, Chancery, or Probate, with the Rules of each Court respectively. Adapted to the Use of Practitioners in all the Courts, and also to the Use of Students. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Editor of "The Common-law Procedure Acts, 1852 and 1854." [V. & R. Stevens & Sons, 1860.]

The Common-law Procedure Acts, and other Statutes relating to the Practice of the Superior Courts of Common Law, and the Rules of Court, with Notes. By JOHN C. F. S. DAY, Barrister-at-Law.

[Sweet, 1861.]

THE passing of a third Common-law Procedure Act has created a demand for a book incorporating all the three acts, with the usual concomitants of decided cases, rules, &c.; and, recollecting the number of books brought into existence by the first of these acts, we could feel no anxiety as to the demand being speedily met. The two books whose names head this article have already appeared, and call for our notice.

Mr. Finlason's, which, we believe, appeared first, although by its exterior label it professes to be merely a work on the three Common-law Procedure Acts, seems, by its title-page, to have been conceived in a more ambitious spirit. In the absence of a preface, we have had to ascertain the author's object from the title-page and headings, and it appears to have been, to collect, for the use of students and practitioners in the Chancery, Common-law, and Probate Courts, all the acts relating either to common-law procedure or trials of issues of fact. That all have not been collected we think will appear from the list of contents; but the bulk of the modern acts on procedure seems, at all events, to be contained in this book. It also contains two other important acts, which, perhaps, hardly come within the scope of a book on procedure, viz. the Bills of Sale and the Mercantile-law Amendment Acts. We are not, however, satisfied with the manner in which Mr. Finlason has executed his task. The reprint of the statutes themselves is not perfect. Thus we find some dozen sections omitted from the Common-law Procedure Acts, without any intimation of their contents, and, unimportant as they turn out to be, the reader is, nevertheless, obliged to refer to some other book to ascertain that fact. Again, we find the important interpretation clause of the Bills of Sale Act omitted, and put into a note to sect. 1, without any intimation that it is part of the act; and the schedules to the Procedure Act of 1852 are not appended to that statute, but intermingled with the rules of court and forms, Schedule (B.) heading the list, without being even described as such schedule. But what struck us most as an indication of haste and want of arrangement was our finding the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, in a note at p. 221, instead of in its proper order at p. 5; and the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, at the end of the book, with an intimation that it has been omitted at p. 14, although merely an alteration of the paging would have allowed of its insertion. We also perceive indications of carelessness in the inaccuracies of the references given by the table of contents; and though the notes contain that learning for which the author's name is a guarantee, we feel our confidence somewhat shaken when we find, in note (c) to sect. 14 of the Mercantile-law Amendment Act, a reference to Jackson v. Woolley as deciding that mere knowledge of a co-debtor gives no greater effect to a payment, without any intimation of the fact that the Court of Queen's Bench also decided that the section was retrospective, and was overruled on that point by the Exchequer Chamber. In fine, we think that this book, although it contains a mass of valuable information in the way of statutes and cases—and, after the strictures it has been our disagreeable duty to make, we feel very anxious to draw attention to this good feature of the book—and cannot but be useful to those who wish to have in a small space many important statutes, with a valuable collection of notes on them, is faulty in its execution. This book contains the germ of a very valuable addition to our law library; but Mr. Finlason, in his haste, as we imagine, to precede other writers, has not done himself proper justice.

With regard to Mr. Day's book, this pretends to be nothing more than is indicated by its title—the three Common-law Procedure Acts, with the rules, &c., and notes. The task which Mr. Day has imposed on himself he has well performed, and we cordially recommend his treatise both to students and practitioners. It commences with an exceedingly good sketch of the leading alterations introduced by these acts; and in the notes to the Procedure Acts themselves we find every statute or part of a statute (except the ninth part of the Merchant Shipping Act) which is referred to by those acts, and necessary for their complete exposition; and the notes themselves contain some very clever little treatises on subjects suggested by different sections of the acts—for instance, on affidavits, at p. 15; on evidence, at p. 195; on discovery, at p. 221; on equitable defences, at p. 241; and on interpleader, at p. 261. There is also a copious index, which is no mean feature in a book. We do Mr. Day simple justice when we say that he has produced a careful, clever, and satisfactory book, useful both to the legal student and practitioner.

PUBLIC PROSECUTORS.

In the number of THE JURIST for the 19th January, 1861, will be found an article taken from The Solicitors' Journal, intitled "Public Prosecutors." The last number of that paper contains the following article, which is essentially connected with the former:—

"We noticed some weeks ago that an attempt was being made to throw open the prosecutions of offenders, committed by the Leeds borough magistrates, to the Profession generally, instead of allowing them to be conducted exclusively by two gentlemen appointed fifteen or sixteen years ago by the town council as public prosecutors. The subject was referred to a committee of the council, which on the 13th inst. reported as follows:—'That this committee approve of the principle of the employment of public prosecutors, and are of opinion that the ends of public justice would be best served by the appointment of such officers; but recommend to the council that the present appointments be rescinded from and after such time as the council may deem expedient, and that the future appointments to these offices be not permanent, but rotatory, and continue in force for twelve months only; the parties appointed being required to conduct such prosecutions for the county allowance. That the justices be recommended in all special or important cases, where it is considered expedient for the ends of public justice so to do, to bind over the party aggrieved to prosecute at either the sessions or assizes, as the case may be.'

"It was thereupon moved that the report be adopted, and that the committee be authorised to carry it out, and report to the council; and a resolution to that effect was, after some discussion, carried unanimously. The gentleman who moved the adoption of the report explained that the system which its framers contemplated was, that the public prosecutors should conduct all cases, excepting those which might seem so important to the magistrates as to induce them to bind over the party aggrieved to prosecute, instead of binding over a policeman, and that such exceptional cases should be conducted by the prosecutor's own attorney. Instead, moreover, of the office of public prosecutor being a permanent one, it would only be held for a year by each occupant, who would be selected by lot from those attorneys practising within the borough who were able and willing to take it. If the town council and the magistrates insist on interfering with the conduct of prosecutions, which they appear to have no right to do, the arrangement suggested by the committee appears to be as little open to objection as any that could be made. The main ground alleged for assuming the right is, that if the party aggrieved were left free in every case to choose his own attorney, there might be touting for prosecutions on the part of some attorneys who do not stand high in the Profession. So far as Leeds is concerned, however, we believe that this apprehension is unfounded; and even if it were not, we object, on principle, to the doing of evil that good may come. The town council of a borough has no more right to appoint a public prosecutor than has the parish vestry or the board of guardians, nor have the magistrates any right to say to the real prosecutor, 'You shall not prosecute, but we will bind over one of the police to do so.' If the present system of prosecuting offenders requires amendment; let the Legislature interfere; but in the meantime corporations and magistrates ought not to exceed their powers on the mere ground of expediency."

THE CRIMINAL LAW.

SPEECH OF THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL.

ON Thursday evening the Solicitor-General introduced into the House of Commons a series of bills to consolidate and amend the statute law of England and Ireland relating to several very important branches of the criminal law. We give his speech on that occasion, as reported in The Times of Friday.

The Solicitor-General rose to move for leave to introduce bills to consolidate and amend the statute law of England and Ireland relating to offences against the person, malicious injuries to property, larceny, forgery, coinage offences, accessories and abettors, and also to repeal certain enactments which had been consolidated in other acts. He said it would be in the recollection of the House that during last session bills bearing the same title as those on the notice paper came down from the other House, and, after being read the second time, had to be dropped because the state of public business would not admit of their then receiving that consideration in committee which was thought desirable. He now proposed to re-introduce them, in redemption of a promise given at the time of their withdrawal. The bills in question were seven in number, and their general object was to consolidate and assimilate the statute law of England and Ireland bearing upon crimes. One of the seven, however, was simply a repealing bill, abolishing the enactments for which the other six, if passed, would become the substitutes; while another, referring to accessories and abettors, fell rather under the category of criminal procedure than of criminal punishments. These measures would not interfere with that portion of our criminal law, now small in extent compared with the rest, which was common or unwritten. As to the propriety of consolidating the statute law, but one opinion was entertained among all who had considered the subject. Any attempt, on the other hand, to collect and put into a compact form that other part of the criminal law which was called common or unwritten, would amount, not to consolidation merely, but to codification, and would stir up matters of controversy. But, as for many years past the great bulk of our criminal law had been the creature of statute, the bills which he was about to bring in would effect a very considerable reform in the administration of that branch of our jurisprudence. The punishments provided by the common law were comparatively few and simple. As society grew older, and new wants were felt, other punishments had to be established, and these were based upon statute. The measures, therefore, to which he invited attention not only dealt with a very large portion of our criminal law, but with that portion which was most familiar in its operation, and which, in its relation to the interests of society, was of the gravest character. No doubt, while consolidating, it was wise also to assimilate the law of the two countries as far as practical and convenient; but, as the circumstances and exigencies of the two nations in important points materially varied, it was obvious that a limit was placed by that fact on the expediency of such an assimilation. That distinction had been observed in framing the bills now before the House. The proposal contained in the bills to consolidate and assimilate was but part of a most important work, in which it would be of the highest advantage to make material progress—he meant the reformation of the statute book. In order to this the statute book should contain only those statutes which were in operation—not repealed, expired, or obsolete; and that those statutes which alone composed the statute book should appear on the face of it in a convenient form, collected under proper heads and divisions. This collection was the function of consolidation, and when consolidation had taken place, expurgation must follow. They could not have a perfectly satisfactory statute book until they were able to combine these two operations. Consolidation was the first step, and the necessity for it was the most urgent. He hoped the House would be of opinion that the step taken by these bills was in the right direction, and that the benefit to be derived from them, if passed, would be not inconsiderable, forming an auspicious beginning in the course of general statute consolidation, and conferring important facilities and benefits, in the way of clearness, intelligibility, and access, both to those who were subject to the law and those who administered it. He admitted, however, that after the sum of improvement these bills would effect, much would still remain to be done. Suppose these bills passed, they would be published in autumn as component parts of the statute book, which, so far, would be extended; but if they proceeded in a proper direction, with the other process of expurgation going on, a great mass of enactments and clauses of other acts would disappear from the statute book. The subject of consolidation had not been recently taken up for the first time; its necessity had been long felt, and legal writers of great eminence, in comparatively early times, when the statute book was much less formidable than now, had insisted on it, and deplored that it had not been carried into effect. That eminent statesman, Sir R. Peel, had taken great interest in the question, and various acts consolidating the criminal law had been prepared under his auspices, and still bore his name. A number of commissions had been issued from time to time to inquire into this subject. The first commission for the digest and consolidation of the criminal law was issued in 1833. In 1836 a similar commission was issued, which made three reports. In 1837 there was another commission, and which issued four reports. In 1845 a fourth commission was appointed, which issued five reports. From 1833 down to 1849 there had been no less than four commissions and twelve reports on the subject of consolidation. He alluded to those commissions because the bills he was now seeking to introduce, though not framed by any body of commissioners, had been prepared after a careful perusal of the reports of the various commissions to which he had referred. In 1853 and 1854 two successive commissions were issued, which differed from the previous ones in some respects, and which were called Statute-law Commissions; whereas all the commissions he had mentioned, from 1833 down to 1849, had reference to crime alone, the commission of 1854, which was the last of the series, had reference to the statute law at large, of which that relating to crime formed only a part. In 1856 eight criminal bills were prepared by the Statute-law Commissioners, and were referred to eminent and competent authorities—Lord Wensleydale, the late Chief Justice Jervis, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, and Mr. Greaves. Those bills were the foundation of the measures which he was now seeking to introduce. They were placed before the other House by Lord Cranworth in July, 1856, but in consequence of the late period of the session they were dropped, and not further proceeded with. In the following year a change was made in the mode of procedure adopted by the commissioners. Up to 1857 it had been considered that the labours of the commissioners should be confined to the work of consolidation, without any attempt at amendment; but in that year the Statute-law Commissioners, presided over by Lord Cranworth, resolved that in future consolidations admitted imperfections and omissions should be remedied. That plan had been invariably acted upon since 1857, and the present bills, although entitled to the character of consolidation bills, contained various alterations and amendments of the existing law. With two exceptions they were similar to those which were introduced in 1857, and which had been previously approved by the deliberate judgment of Lord Wensleydale, Chief Justice Jervis, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, and Mr. Greaves. They were not brought forward, therefore, without due consideration; they embodied the result of the labours of successive commissions, and could not fail, he thought, to meet the approval of the House. The next point to which he would advert was that of the assimilation of the criminal law as it prevailed in England and in Ireland—an object which, in the bills on the subject which had been introduced in 1857, it had been sought, to a limited extent, to attain. The question, not being one of a party character, had been dealt with by successive Governments with an earnest desire to solve the difficulties by which it was encompassed in a satisfactory manner; and the Administration of Lord Derby had accordingly, in 1858, taken steps to carry out, still further than had been proposed in the previous year, the principle of which he was speaking. The measures, however, which the Government of Lord Derby had laid before Parliament with that view had been dropped, owing to the dissolution which had taken place shortly after their introduction; but an eminent member of that Government (Mr. Whiteside) had last session laid upon the table certain bills, which had not gone beyond a second reading, and which embraced the principle of assimilation to the extent provided in those to which he now invited the attention of the House. Into the history of the various measures which had been introduced on the subject of the consolidation of the criminal law generally up to the present moment he should not further enter, beyond saying, that, as the bills on their table stood when they had been brought into the other House by the Lord Chancellor last year, persons were made liable to have the punishment of death inflicted upon them for two offences only—murder, and the administration of poison with intent to murder; that subsequently, in the passage of the bills through the other House, three other instances in which death might be inflicted were added to the catalogue of offences so punishable; but that the bills, as they were now framed, had been reentered, in that respect, to the shape in which they had been originally introduced. For malicious injuries a provision was copied from a statute of Geo. 3, inflicting the punishment of death on those who were found guilty of setting fire to arsenals, dockyards, and establishments of that kind. The bill would leave the punishment as it was, and it would be for the House to deal with it. Some expressions of dissent had been used with regard to the punishment of whipping, which occurred with some frequency. Where it was sanctioned at all, it was restricted to persons of the age of eighteen, and some members thought that too advanced an age. He had left the clauses as they stood; but it would be competent for any gentleman, at the proper time, to review the decision of the framers of the bills; and in the end, doubtless, that would be done which would give satisfaction to the House. If the House granted him leave to introduce these bills, he should propose, after they were read a second time, to refer them to a select committee. He had already stated that that course had been satisfactorily adopted by the other House of Parliament. There were circumstances in the state of Ireland more or less different from the circumstances of England, which made it expedient not to alter the principle of the law, but to confine assimilation to cases to which it was reasonably applicable. If the propriety of the changes were challenged, it would be necessary to refer to various enactments affecting the sister kingdom, and to compare them with the criminal law of England. An amount of detailed labour would be necessary, as any member was fairly entitled to require it, and it could be better accomplished in a select committee than in a committee of the whole House. It was not too much to anticipate that the bills would come from the select committee in a state in which they might be regarded with the persuasion that the law was properly and prudently consolidated, and that no injurious changes had been introduced for the purpose of assimilation.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

(Lord St. Leonards).

No purchaser for valuable consideration, or mortgagee, shall be bound by any implied or constructive notice of any charge, or of any other act, matter, or thing affecting the title to the property purchased or taken in mortgage, unless the court shall be of opinion that the conduct of such purchaser or mortgagee amounted to fraud.

RULES OF PRACTICE ON THE REVENUE SIDE OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Time for Pleading, &c.

58. The plea and subsequent pleadings in all cases are to be delivered between the respective parties.

59. Unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, the time for pleading shall be fourteen days from the service of the notice to plead; and a notice requiring the defendant to plead in fourteen days, otherwise judgment, may be indorsed on the information or other proceeding required to be pleaded to or delivered separately; and the time for replying and pleading all subsequent pleadings shall be fourteen days from the service of the notice to reply, &c., and a like notice to that effect may be indorsed on the pleading, or delivered separately, but time may be obtained by order of a judge. On default, after such notice, judgment may be signed.

60. If the opposite party doth not appear on a summons for time, and consent to or oppose the summons, the party applying for time may obtain a subsequent rule or rules for any time not exceeding three weeks on each rule from the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, to be dated the day it is issued; and such rule may from time to time be issued to either party, unless a two days' notice is given to the opposite party that the application for further time is objected to, and in such case the application for further time must be made to the court or a judge.

61. The pleadings and proceedings in revenue may be had and taken throughout the year, without reference to any seal day; provided that, in all cases in which any particular number of days, not expressed to be clear days, is prescribed by the rules or practice of the court, the same shall be reckoned exclusively of the first day and inclusively of the last day, unless the last day shall happen to fall on a Sunday, Christmas-day, Good Friday, or a day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving, in which case the time shall be reckoned exclusively of that day also.

62. The days between the Thursday next before and the Wednesday next after Easter-day and Christmas-day, and the three following days, shall not be reckoned or included in any rules, notices, or other proceedings, except notices of trial. Informations may be delivered or served on any day except Sundays, Christmas-day, Good Friday, or any day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving.

63. In case the time for pleading to any information, or for answering any pleadings, shall not have expired before the 10th August in any year, the party called upon to plead, reply, &c. shall have the same number of days for that purpose, after the 24th October, as if the information or preceding pleading had been delivered or filed on the 24th October. This rule is not to apply when a defendant is in gaol under a capias for penalties, or under an attachment, and is afterwards served with a copy of the information.

64. Every information and other pleading shall be intitled "In the Exchequer," and of the day, month, and year when the same was filed or delivered, as the case may be, and shall bear no other time or date, and every information and other pleading shall also be entered on the record made up for trial (and on the judgment-roll if necessary) under the date of the day, month, and year when the same respectively took place, and without reference to any other time or date, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge.

65. In cases of claim under extent or transcript of escheat or outlawry, or appearance to scire facias, the proceedings may commence in the words set forth in the Schedule (C.), Forms 1, 2, and 3, hereto annexed, under their respective heads, or as near thereto as may be.

66. No entry of continuances by way of imparlance, curia advisare vult, vicecomes non misit breve, or otherwise, shall be made upon any record or roll whatever, or in the pleadings.

67. If no proceeding has been had for one year from the last proceeding had, the party who desires to proceed shall give a calendar month's notice to the other of his intention to proceed; a summons of a judge, if no order be made thereupon, shall not be deemed a proceeding within this rule; a rule for time to plead &c., and a notice of trial, although afterwards countermanded, shall be deemed a proceeding.

Recognisances.

68. All recognisances, if taken and acknowledged in town, are to be taken and acknowledged before a judge; and if a recognisance be taken and acknowledged in the country, the same may be taken and acknowledged before a commissioner for taking special bail in the Exchequer; and in the latter case an affidavit of caption must be made and filed.

69. No commission in future need issue for taking recognisance or bail in the country, provided that, where necessary, in the case of a bond given by a public officer, such commission may issue as heretofore.

70. Where a recognisance is ordered by the Privy Council to be entered into, the same, after the acknowledgment thereof, is to be filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office; and thereupon the Queen's Remembrancer is to grant a certificate of such recognisance being filed.

71. No inrolment of any recognisances shall be necessary, but the same are to be filed in the office.

72. All recognisances and bails are to be prepared on parchment by the respective parties entering into the same, excepting when, in the case of a bond by a public officer, the Queen's Remembrancer shall be directed by the Treasury to prepare the same.

[For forms of recognisances, see Schedule (C.), Forms 12 and 13.]

Issue.

73. No copy issue need be delivered, and the record of Nisi Prius in all cases is to be made up and entered with the associate by the solicitor of the Crown, but need not be sealed.

[See forms of Nisi Prius record, Schedule (C.), Forms 1, 2, 3, and 4.]

Notice of Trial and Countermand.

74. The notice of trial shall be ten days in all cases, and countermand of notice of trial four days before the time mentioned in the notice of trial, unless short notice of trial has been given, when two days shall be sufficient.

The associate in all cases at Nisi Prius is to take the verdict.

Jury Process, Juries, and View.

75. That sects. 104 to 115, both inclusive, of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, together with the rules 44 to 49, both inclusive, of Hilary Term, 1853, where applicable, shall extend and be adapted and applied to suits on the revenue side of the court.

As to Admission of Documents.

76. The several provisions and enactments of sects. 117, 118, and 119 of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, together with rules 29 and 30 of Hilary Term, 1853, shall, so far as they may be applicable, extend and apply to cases on the revenue side of the court.

77. No subpoena for the production of an original record shall be issued unless a rule of court or the order of a judge shall be produced to the officer issuing the same, and filed with him, and unless the writ shall be made conformable to the description of the document in such rule or order.

78. All depositions of witnesses taken under the order of a judge, rule of court, or writ of commission shall be returned to and filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

Withdrawal of Plea and Confession.

79. A defendant may, at any time before trial, withdraw his plea, by delivering such withdrawal to the solicitor of the department, after which the Crown may immediately enter judgment, and issue process thereupon. When the Crown signs judgment, in addition to filing the information, the withdrawal of the plea must also be filed.

80. Where the defendant confesses the information or scire facias, such confession, as well as the information or scire facias, is to be filed at the time of signing judgment.

Costs.

81. One day's notice of taxing costs, together with a copy of the bill of costs, and affidavit of increase (if any), shall be given to the solicitor of the department or attorney of the party whose costs are to be taxed by the other party or his attorney, in all cases where a notice to tax is necessary.

82. One appointment only shall be deemed necessary for proceeding in the taxation of costs.

83. Notice of taxing costs shall not be necessary in any case where the defendant has not appeared in person or by attorney.

84. The costs of the day for not proceeding to trial may be obtained by a side-bar rule on affidavit.

85. When issues in law and fact are raised, the costs of the several issues, both in law and fact, will follow the judgment or finding; and if the party entitled to the general costs of the cause obtains a verdict on any material issue, he will also be entitled to the general costs of the trial; but if no material issue in fact be found for the party otherwise entitled to the general costs of the cause, the costs of the trial shall be allowed to the opposite party.

86. On all rules and orders of the court or judge, where costs are directed to be paid to the Crown, a certificate shall be granted by the Queen's Remembrancer of the costs allowed, and on default of payment the solicitor of the department may sue out a subpoena for the payment of such costs; and on an affidavit of service thereof, and demand made, and non-payment, a fiat for an attachment may be granted.

Judgments.

87. Judgments may be signed either in term or vacation, and shall be entered of the day, month, and year (whether in term or vacation) when signed, and shall not have relation to any other day; but it shall be competent for the court or a judge to order a judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc.

88. All judgments after trials at Nisi Prius or at bar may be signed and execution issued thereon in fourteen days, and in cases of claim such writ or order as may be applicable may also issue in the like period, unless the judge or court who tried the cause, or some other judge or the court, shall order execution to issue against the defendant; or, in case of claim, such writ or order as aforesaid, at an earlier or later period, with or without terms.

89. It shall not be necessary, before issuing execution on any judgment whatever, to enter the proceedings on the roll, but a judgment adapted to the particular case, according to the forms in Schedule (B.), is to be filed on parchment in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office by the party entitled to the same, and shortly entered in the judgment book, except in cases when the judgment roll is required by the party or ordered by a judge to be carried in, when a complete copy of the proceedings must be filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, for the purpose of being inrolled therein, and the same shall be inrolled by the proper officer.

90. On default of pleading after appearance, judgment may be signed, and execution issue forthwith.

91. In cases of error, where the proceedings are to be inrolled, the copy of such proceedings shall be filed at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, by the plaintiff in error, within six days after delivering to the Queen's Remembrancer the memorandum alleging that there is error.

[For introductory words of a judgment after verdict, when the roll is carried in, see Form 5, Schedule (C.)]

LONDON, MARCH 2, 1861.

LORD CHELMSFORD has opened a fresh campaign against grand juries in the metropolitan district. We have on former occasions (see 6 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 359, 367) alluded to the efforts made by him and others on this subject; and particularly to the bill introduced by him into the House of Lords last session, which passed that House, but from the pressure of business, or some other cause, seems to have been unsuccessful in the House of Commons. A precisely similar bill has now been brought by him into the House of Lords, where, young as the session is, it has already been passed, and has been sent down to the House of Commons, its progress in which we shall anxiously watch.

The object of the bill is stated to be, "to make better provision concerning the procedure against persons charged with indictable offences within the metropolitan district." It would hardly be imagined that the design of a bill with such an unpretending title, and unprefaced by any preamble, was to abolish, in the great majority of cases, an institution which is coeval with our constitution;—to introduce into our law a principle and practice hitherto unknown, namely, the allowing persons to be put on their trial for felonies, either capital or otherwise, on the mere finding of a justice of the peace, nominated, paid by, and removeable at the pleasure of the Executive; and to deprive the subject of all power of prosecuting for offences without first bringing a charge before one of those functionaries.

The institution of the grand jury rests on three principles—first, that no man ought to be subjected to the odium, inconvenience, and danger of a public trial for any serious offence by the mere action of the officers of the Crown, or of any tribunal appointed by it—a salutary guard to the liberty of the subject; secondly, that every subject has a right to bring a criminal to justice, whether the so doing be agreeable or otherwise to the Executive; thirdly, the placing in the hands of a number of persons, taken from the upper classes among the people, a right, by presentment, of their own knowledge, to bring to the notice of the Executive and of society the existence of any evils or abuses within the district where they reside, even though neither the Executive nor an individual has founded, or perhaps could legally found, proceedings upon them. It is true, that in the present day a school of law reformers has sprung up which contends strongly for the abolition of the entire system. The constitutional functions of the grand jury these persons do not appear to have considered, for they never make allusion to them, and confine their attention chiefly to the following points:—That the secrecy of the tribunal renders it irresponsible; that it furnishes facilities for fraud and oppression, by giving opportunity to a wicked person to go before a secret tribunal, and, without notice to the party accused, to get a bill of indictment found against him, which, whether true or false, may be used as an engine of extortion—further proceedings being abandoned if the prosecutor can be bribed—so that justice is defeated if the defendant is guilty, and an infamous wrong is inflicted upon him if he is innocent. In answer to the first of these arguments, it is to be observed that the secrecy of the tribunal is one of its advantages, in many cases at least; and the proposal to abolish it on this account amounts to saying, that in no case ought proceedings to be taken to bring a criminal to justice without first giving him notice of that intention, and consequently an opportunity to escape condemnation by flight. And although the second argument has considerable foundation in fact, the remedy for the evil consists, not in abolishing the grand jury, but in taking security from persons preferring bills before them to go on with the prosecution if the bills are found. This course has already been adopted with complete success in criminal informations in the Queen's Bench, by stat. 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 18; and in the case of indictments for various species of offences by the Vexatious Indictments Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17.

The present bill, however, it will be said, does not propose to abolish grand juries in general, but is confined exclusively to the metropolitan district, and for many purposes retain them even there. These considerations would have more force if the advocates of the present and similar bills did not use arguments in their support which, if they have any weight at all, are available against grand juries in any shape or in any place; and refrained from indulgence in general condemnation and abuse of the system. But, apart from this, we must observe, that, so far as the constitutional functions of the grand jury are concerned, it is impossible to take a distinction between metropolitan and provincial districts. However excellent the metropolitan police magistrates may be, still they are the servants of the Crown, and as such not the proper persons to decide a question which the constitution has wisely entrusted to the people. Nay, more, the entrusting such a power to them would be sure in time to work their deterioration, by holding out a temptation to the Executive to appoint to those offices persons in whom the sense of justice and of constitutional freedom are not strong.

The following are the principal provisions of Lord Chelmsford's new bill. The 1st and 2nd sections provide, that no charge shall be preferred or tried without previous investigation before a justice of the peace; and that when a person shall be committed or detained to take his trial, or bound by recognisance to appear and take his trial, no indictment shall be preferred, but the officer of the court shall file an information charging him with the offence, and he shall be tried thereon. Now, one of the great securities to the peace of society which the existing law affords is, that the man who commits an offence never can tell from what quarter he may be attacked respecting it, seeing that it is in the power of any person to prefer a bill of indictment against him for it. The section we have just recited puts an end to one part of this; but the 4th section reserves the right to the prosecutor, if dissatisfied with the decision of the justice of the peace in dismissing the charge, to prefer an indictment against the party charged: thus placing the prosecutor in the odious and difficult position of pressing a charge that has been rejected by a magistrate—a topic sure to be urged to a tribunal with most mischievous effect by the accused and his counsel. And in order to place as many obstacles as possible in the way of the permission thus reserved, the prosecutor must “give notice in writing of his intention to prefer the indictment, and of the court at which such indictment is to be preferred, to the justice or justices within a month, &c., and such indictment shall not be preferred except at the court mentioned in such notice.” So that, if the prosecutor and the justice agree to hush up the charge, no other person (unless, perhaps, the Attorney-General) could interfere, and the criminal might laugh at justice at his pleasure. And a further difficulty is imposed by the 6th section, which enacts that the grand jury is to be summoned only three times a year at the Central Criminal Court, and four times a year at the sessions of the peace.

The subsequent sections of this bill except a number of cases from the provisions of its earlier ones, and those exceptions are of a character which appear to us condemnatory of the principle of the bill. The fact that the grand jury is a constitutional protection to the subject leaks out in spite of all attempts to ignore it. Thus, sect. 8 enacts, “Nothing in this act shall apply to any charge of treason or misprision of treason, or of any other offence against her Majesty, the State, or the Government, nor to any charge of any nuisance to any highway, bridge, or river, or of any nuisance affecting the safety or health of her Majesty's subjects, &c.” The first clause of this sentence is evidently framed on the assumption, that if an offence is one against the Queen, the State, or Government, that fact must appear on the face of the proceedings in the first instance, and can neither lurk under a charge of an offence apparently of a different character, nor be developed in the course of the proceedings. And it is not easy to see why, if a justice of the peace can safely be entrusted to put men on their trial for felonies, including even murder, he cannot be entrusted to put them on their trial for “nuisance to any highway, bridge, or river, or nuisance affecting the safety or health of her Majesty's subjects.” The 9th and 10th sections further exempt from the operation of the proposed act trials on corners' inquisitions, and on indictments removed to the Central Criminal Court by the order of the Queen's Bench, under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16; also informations filed in the Queen's Bench, ex officio or otherwise; or indictments directed by any court, judge, or judicial functionary having authority to direct them.

In dealing with this bill the House of Commons will have to determine the question whether the arguments which have been urged of late years against the grand jury system, nominally as it exists in the metropolis, but in reality against it altogether, are or are not well founded. That there is ample room for reform in the metropolitan grand jury system, especially in the persons summoned to serve upon those juries, we are fully persuaded; and we are also inclined to think that the salutary provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, might be considerably, if not indefinitely, extended. But the abolition of the grand jury system, or a step towards its abolition, which, not only from its contents, but from the language employed and principles avowed by its supporters, we collect plainly to be the object of this bill, is a very different matter. If, on full examination of the subject, the Legislature in its wisdom decrees the total or partial abolition of that system, well; but the question ought to be fully discussed, in some way directly and distinctly raising it, and not on a bill modestly professing to make better provision concerning procedure, but in reality intended to be the first step towards putting an end to an ancient and valuable institution.

TRUST INVESTMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Your correspondent "J. C." of last week points out that an investment of trust funds in the old East India Stock, under the recent acts and Order in Chancery, would have the unjust effect of benefiting the tenant for life at the expense of those in remainder; and he raises the question, whether the act of last session (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 11) would afford an indemnity to a trustee so investing.

But surely the condition required by the act of 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32), that "such investment shall in other respects be reasonable and proper," is little more than would be implied, if not expressed; and the act of 1860, moreover, is clearly not intended to repeal this qualification in the previous enactment, since in the very next section (sect. 12) it expressly recognises and confirms that enactment, by declaring that it shall operate retrospectively, whatever that means.

Be this as it may, however, the case of The Colne Valley and Halstead Railway Bill (29 L. J., Ch., 33), in which Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., and afterwards the full Court of Appeal, refused to sanction an investment in the new East India Stock under the act of 1859, seems to amount to an authority in favour of the legality of such an investment as that now in question, even under that act, and even in spite of the unjust result alluded to by your correspondent, which, or something similar to which, was apparently present to the mind of the court, or at least to that of the Lord Chancellor, who says (p. 37)—"I concur with Lord St. Leonards in thinking that the clause" (sect. 32 of the act of 1859) "is in direct opposition to the principle of law which governs the relative rights of tenants for life and reversioners, and that it would lead to jobbing with trust funds." And again, "The court cannot look to whether it is a just enactment or not."

According to this case, although the court, if asked, might refuse to give its sanction to an investment in the old East India Stock, it would not be a breach of trust. But might it not be the duty of the trustee to retain a sufficient portion of the income to preserve the capital unimpaired?

The questions which arise as to East India Stock are some only of many questions to which the recent legislation as to trust investments is likely to give rise, and upon which judicial or legislative interpretation is called for.

It may not be superfluous to remark that there is a third enactment of recent date upon the same subject of trust investments, which must be construed together with those above mentioned, viz. the Trustees and Mortgagees Act of 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, ss. 25, 32, 33, 34).

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. K.

ASSIGNMENT TO ONESELF AND OTHERS— 22 & 23 VICT. c. 35, s. 21.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The above section, in terms, gives power to one person only to assign personality to himself and others. An objection has been raised, that it does not enable two or more to assign to themselves and others. Do you think there is anything in the objection?

Yours &c.,

Feb. 26, 1861.

LINCOLN'S INN.

["Lincoln's Inn" cannot, we think, see much in this objection. A. and B. wish to assign to A., B., and C. The difficulty before Lord St. Leonards' Act was, that A. could not assign to A., and B. could not assign to B.; there was no doubt that A. could assign to B., and B. to A. The difficulty has been completely removed by the enactment, that any person shall have power to assign directly to himself and another person or persons, and this without the aid of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, which makes words importing the singular include the plural. We may observe that the word "corporation" has been inserted in the 21st section of Lord St. Leonards' Act in a very odd manner—"directly to himself and another person or other persons or corporation."]

Rebbling.

The Law in relation to the Legal Liabilities of Engineers, Architects, Contractors, and Builders, including the Law of Contracts, Arbitration, Masters and Workmen, and Combinations or Strikes. By W. CUNNINGHAM GLEN, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 8vo., pp. 148.

WE are told in the Preface that "the object of this work is to place before the professions to which it is addressed the legal liabilities that members of these professions incur in their various relations as employed and employers. It is not, therefore, one which is exclusively intended for the legal practitioner in the actual practice of the law, but has more especial reference to the rocks and shoals by which those so engaged are surrounded in the daily transaction of their business, and it seeks to be a guide to them in the several legal liabilities arising in the practice of their professions." There can be but one plan for a book of this nature. It is impossible to make it either a primer or a text-book for the legal student or practitioner. Everything must be told which an unprofessional person can usefully know, either as a guide for action or a warning to consult his legal adviser. Anything beyond this would merely distract or puzzle the reader; and the arrangement must be the clearest and the exposition the briefest possible. Lord St. Leonards' Handy Book is a tolerably fair example of what such a work ought to be, as most of the Handy Books that its success has called forth are of the contrary. Lord St. Leonards wrote from the fulness of knowledge and experience; and it is obvious that unless a writer has great knowledge and experience he cannot be familiar with the rocks and shoals of which Mr. Glen speaks. It is not in Pinnock, nor even in Malte-Brun, that our pilots learn the intricacies of the channels. We do not find in this work traces of the knowledge and experience which would be necessary to enable the author to redeem in a creditable manner the promise with which he sets out; and we doubt whether he has even endeavoured to do his best. There is no indication of judgment or care in the selection, arrangement, or setting forth of his materials. This is the arrangement:—

I. Contracts.—1. Generally.—2. By letters or correspondence.—3. How construed.—4. Stamps.—5. Conditions precedent.—6. Covenants.—7. Breaches of contract.

II. Contracts with corporations.

III. Extra works.

IV. Party walls and injuries to buildings.

V. Arbitrations.

VI. The relation of architects and surveyors to employers.

VII. Liability of contractors for damage.

VIII. Liability of masters for injuries to servants and others.

IX. Differences between masters and workmen.

X. Combinations of masters and workmen, strikes, &c.

XI. The Truck system.

But little is to be expected from a writer who separates the consideration of conditions precedent from that of the construction of contracts by a digression on stamps, and who, in addressing unprofessional readers, devotes a distinct division to covenants. The subject-matter of the first chapter is thus defined—"A contract or agreement is composed of two parts, imposing reciprocal obligations upon each of the parties to it, in order to compel each to perform his part of the agreement; and it imports two considerations; that is to say, the performance of the agreement on either side is the consideration for the performance of the agreement on the other side. These may be stated as the general nature and constituent elements of a contract." Starting with this definition at the commencement of the first chapter, let us see how the writer gets over the ground. First, we have a paragraph on fraud; then a dictum by Lord St. Leonards in Ridgway v. Wharton (4 Jur., N. S., 173), to the effect, that if a man agrees to be bound by written terms, and to sign the agreement, he is bound though he does not sign. And then comes the following paragraph:—"A tender of a specification of contract for scavenging docks, which concluded with an engagement to execute a contract on the preceding conditions within fourteen days, was held not to bind the person tendering to produce the contract for execution, as it would be the duty of the party to whom the tender was made to perform the contract; and in the same case it was held, that a contract for scavenging the docks was not within any of the exceptions to the general rule, that a corporation aggregate can only be bound by contract under seal (as to which, see post). The London Dock Company v. Sinnott (8 El. & Bl. 347)." We need scarcely say that the sole point decided in The London Dock Company v. Sinnott was, that as the company was not bound, the other party was not bound. The section concludes with a recommendation to the parties concerned to take legal advice if they can afford it, and to understand what their contracts contain; and these are the whole contents of the section on "contracts generally." The next section, on contracts by letters, occupies one page, and contains one passage which is contradictory—"In every contract there must be mutuality, otherwise specific performance will not be decreed; and if it be signed by one party only, it will be good to charge him within the Statute of Frauds;" and another which is unintelligible—"Letters, however, may not, in themselves, constitute a complete contract; therefore, when a letter, signed by both parties, specifying the prices to be charged for some work to be done, it was held not to be a complete contract, and that parol evidence was admissible of a contemporaneous agreement as to the period of payment." The next section, "How construed," contains ten lines, and informs us that contracts are to be construed according to the apparent meaning, subject to the special interpretation of words by reference to the custom of a place or a trade. The next chapter, on stamps, does not state when stamps are necessary, and to what amount; but it tells us, that "if an agreement cannot be read in evidence for want of a stamp, the party seeking to enforce it cannot recover the value of the work and labour to which the agreement refers, although the other party to it may have had the benefit of such work and labour, without explaining, that if the plaintiff does not himself propound the unstamped instrument, its existence cannot be used to defeat his claim on a quantum meruit." And Vincent v. Cole (3 Car. & P. 481) is cited to shew that the court cannot look at an unstamped contract to ascertain whether certain works are included in it or not, without any expression of doubt as to the soundness of that decision.

Under the head "Breach of contract," Humphries v. Jones (5 Exch. 952) is cited to teach builders and others how to frame a declaration in assumpsit under certain circumstances; and breaches of contract are further illustrated by the statement, that "if a license be obtained to dig a quarry stone on the ground of another person, specific performance of the license will be compelled by the court; for it is immaterial whether in form an agreement to dig stone be a license or a lease, so far as its construction by a court of equity is concerned."

Although the whole subject of contracts, other than contracts with corporations, is disposed of in nineteen pages, through which we search in vain for any suggestion that certain contracts must be in writing, we have ten pages devoted to a tedious statement at great length of cases relating to contracts with corporations, more than two pages being taken up with Lamprell v. The Guardians of the Billericay Union (3 Exch. 283), the result of which might have been stated in four lines. But if this is excusable, the filling of twenty-two pages with a reprint of the arbitration clauses in the Companies Clauses, Lands Clauses, and Railways Clauses Acts is not; for those provisions have no relation to the subject-matter of the book.

On the whole, we consider that this book is not creditable to the author, and cannot be profitable to those who have the misfortune to purchase it. In striking contrast with this and similar catchpenny publications is a little book by Mr. D. Gibbons, "The Law of Contract for Works and Services," published in 1849, in Weale's Rudimentary Series—the work of an able and experienced lawyer, arranged and written with clearness and precision, and well adapted to the wants of the class for whom it was intended.

A Manual of Equity Jurisprudence, founded on Story's Commentaries and Spence's Equitable Jurisdiction, and comprising in a small Compass the Points of Equity usually occurring in Chancery and Conveyancing, and in the General Practice of a Solicitor. By JOSIAH W. SMITH, B.C.L., Barrister-at-Law. Sixth Edition. Price 12s. cloth.

When a law book reaches a sixth edition we may fairly assume that it is useful to a large class of readers, and that it fills up a vacant space in legal literature. We may safely say that each edition of the Manual of Equity Jurisprudence has been a decided improvement upon its predecessor, and that the present edition (the sixth) is worthy of the reputation of its learned author, Mr. Josiah W. Smith, who, in addition to his other legal works, has lately conferred upon the Profession and public a most important boon by his labours as one of the consolidators of the Orders of the Court of Chancery, and who has also, we are glad to observe, been most deservedly raised to the rank of one of her Majesty's counsel.

Students will find in this book a succinct yet comprehensive view of the leading principles of equity jurisprudence; and it will be found particularly useful to practitioners, as containing within a small space a large body of points and principles constantly arising, or requiring application in actual business.

We may add, that the utility of this Manual has been much increased by references to all the new cases of any importance, and by an enlarged and copious index.

RULES OF PRACTICE ON THE REVENUE SIDE OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Writ of Inquiry in respect of Profits or unliquidated Damages.

92. When the claim of the Crown is in respect of profits or unliquidated damages, and the Crown is entitled to sign judgment by default, either for non-appearance or otherwise, the judgment (except as hereinafter mentioned) shall be interlocutory, and thereupon a writ of inquiry in Form 13, Schedule (A.), may issue to assess the profits or damages as on the common-law side of the court, and ten days' notice of the inquiry shall be given to the defendant's attorney, if he has appeared by attorney, or to the defendant if otherwise; but final judgment shall not be signed until four days after the writ of inquiry and inquisition has been filed, if the return of the writ is past; if not, four days after such return shall have taken place; provided that in such cases where the Crown elects to apply to the court to impose a fine the judgment may be final, as heretofore.

Writ of Execution.

93. Upon any judgment in intrusion for the removal of persons intruding on the Queen's possession of lands or premises, and for costs, there may be either one writ or separate writs of execution for such removal, and for the costs, at the election of the Attorney-General, and the form of the writ or writs for such purposes may be in Form 10, in Schedule (A.), hereto annexed.

94. No writ of execution shall be issued until judgment has been signed.

95. Every writ of execution for the recovery of any debt, penalty, or sum of money shall be indorsed with a direction to the sheriff, or other officer or person to whom the writ is directed, to levy only the money really due and payable, and sought to be recovered under the judgment.

96. After judgment for the Crown upon any claim, a writ of execution may issue for the costs, in addition to the writ applicable to the property relating to such claim.

Proceedings in Error.

97. Either party alleging error in law may deliver to the Queen's Remembrancer a memorandum in writing, in the form contained in the Schedule (C.) to these rules annexed, Form 6, or to the like effect, intitled "In the Exchequer and Suit," and signed by the party or his attorney, alleging that there is error in law in the record and proceedings; whereupon the Queen's Remembrancer shall file such memorandum, and deliver to the party lodging the same a note of the receipt thereof; and a copy of such note, together with a statement of the grounds of error intended to be argued, may be served on the solicitor of the department or attorney in the cause, as the case may be. Proceedings in error in law shall be deemed a super-seas of execution from the time of the service of the copy of such note, together with the statement of the grounds of error intended to be argued, until default in putting in bail or an affirmance of the judgment, or discontinuance of the proceedings in error, or until the proceedings in error shall be otherwise disposed of without a reversal of the judgment: provided always, that if the grounds of error shall appear to be frivolous, the court or a judge, upon summons, may order execution to issue.

98. Upon any judgment hereafter to be given for the Crown on the revenue side of the court in any suit, including intrusion, except on special verdict, special case, or bill of exceptions, execution shall not be stayed or delayed by proceedings in error or super-seas thereupon, without the special order of the court or a judge, or consent of the Attorney-General, unless the person in whose name such proceedings in error be brought be bound with two, or, by leave of the court or a judge, more than two, sufficient sureties, shall, within four clear days after lodging the memorandum alleging error, or after the signing of the judgment, whichever shall last happen, or before execution executed, be bound unto her Majesty, her heirs or successors, by recognisance of bail, to be acknowledged in this court, in double the sum adjudged to be recovered by the said judgment (except in case of a penalty, and in case of a penalty, in double the sum really due, and double the costs, and in cases of intrusion, double the yearly value of the property, and double the costs recovered by the judgment), to prosecute the proceedings in error with effect, and also to satisfy and pay (if the said judgment be affirmed, or the proceedings in error be discontinued by the plaintiff therein) all and singular the sum or sums of money and costs adjudged or to be adjudged upon the former judgment, and all costs and damages to be also awarded for the delaying of execution: provided always, that the court or a judge may direct any other form of security to be given, and to such amount as may seem to the court or a judge sufficient, or may order money to be paid into court in such manner and to such amount as may be deemed sufficient.

99. The assignment of and joinder in error in law shall not be necessary or used, and instead thereof a suggestion, to the effect that error is alleged by the one party and denied by the other, may be entered on the judgment roll, in the form contained in Schedule (C.) to these rules annexed, Form 7, or to the like effect.

100. The roll shall be made up, and the suggestion last aforesaid entered by the plaintiff in error, within ten days after the service of the note of the receipt of the memorandum alleging error, or within such other time as the court or a judge may order; and, in default of such suggestion, the defendant in error shall be at liberty to sign judgment of non pros.

101. The several provisions contained in the 154th, 155th, 156th, and 157th sections of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, where applicable, shall extend and be applied in like cases on the revenue side of the court.

102. Either party alleging error in fact may deliver to the Queen's Remembrancer a memorandum in writing, in the form contained in Schedule (C.) to these rules annexed, Form 8, or to the like effect, intitled "In the Exchequer and Suit," and signed by the party or his attorney, alleging that there is error in fact in the proceedings, together with an affidavit of the matter of fact in which the alleged error consists; whereupon the Queen's Remembrancer shall file such memorandum and affidavit, and deliver to the party lodging the same a note of the receipt thereof; and a copy of such note and affidavit may be served on the opposite party or his attorney; and such service shall have the same effect, and the same proceedings may be had thereafter, as heretofore had after the service of the rule for allowance of a writ of error in fact.

103. The several enactments and provisions contained in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, sects. 159 to 166, both inclusive, shall, so far as the same are applicable, extend and be applied to like proceedings in error on the revenue side of the court.

104. The sureties in cases of bail in error are to be approved of by the solicitor of the department, in like manner as on a capias; but if the bail piece cannot be completed in four days, as mentioned in rule 98, further time may be applied for to a judge.

105. After suggestion in error has been entered on the roll, either party may set the cause down with the Queen's Remembrancer four clear days before the day appointed for arguing errors from the Exchequer; and four clear days before such day of argument the plaintiff in error must deliver paper books to the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, and the defendant in error must deliver paper books to the judges of the Court of Common Pleas. Whoever sets down the cause must give immediate notice to the other party that he has done so.

Claims.

106. All claims under extents, diem clausit extremum, indentures of appraisement, or transcript of writs and inquisitions, shall be entered on the respective records, and also in the claim book. If part only of property be claimed, the unclaimed part thereof may be dealt with in the same manner as if there had been no claim.

107. Claim may be entered at any time before process issued, or order obtained, for realising the property returned into court.

New Trials.

108. In every rule nisi for a new trial, or to enter a verdict or nonsuit, the grounds upon which such rule shall have been granted shall be shortly stated therein.

109. If a new trial be granted without any mention of costs in the rule, the costs of the first trial shall not be allowed to the successful party, though he succeed on the second.

Pleading to Estreated Recognisances.

110. When application is to be made to the court or a judge by any party seeking to be relieved from his estreated recognisance, the same may be made on petition to the court or a judge, or by motion founded on a constat of such estreat, to be obtained from the office, and supported by such affidavits as the party may deem necessary. A copy of the petition, or notice of the motion, must be served on the solicitor of the Treasury four days before the hearing of the same.

111. If a party to an estreated recognisance intends to plead thereto, he must obtain a constat of the recognisance at the office, and enter an appearance thereto, and plead to such estreat within fourteen days from the day of entering the appearance, and deliver such plea to the solicitor of the Treasury; and the proceedings may be carried on as in other cases.

Execution on Estreats.

112. In cases of process issuing for the recovery of any fines, issues, amerciaments, penalties, and recognisances estreated, the writ to be first used may be as set out in Form 11, Schedule (A.); but the long writ heretofore in use may be issued, when necessary or required, as a second or subsequent writ.

Rules to return Writs or bring in the Body.

113. The rules numbered 130 to 134, both inclusive, of the General Rules of Hilary Term, 1852, as to returning writs or bringing in the body, &c., where applicable, shall extend to, be adapted and applied to, the revenue side of the court.

Rules and Orders.

114. The writ heretofore used calling upon a party to perform a rule or order shall not be necessary or used to bring such party into contempt; but the serving of a copy of the rule or order under the seal of the office, or the copy of an office copy of such rule or order, shall be sufficient to ground an application for an attachment or other writ, as the case may be.

115. No rule to appear, plead, deliver subsequent pleadings, claim, or for concilium or judgment, shall be necessary.

116. It shall not be necessary to the regular service of a rule or order that the original or office copy thereof should be shewn, unless sight thereof be demanded, except in cases of attachment.

117. Service of pleadings, notices, summonses, orders, rules, and other proceedings shall be made before seven o'clock P. M.; if made after that hour the service shall be deemed as made on the following day; but on Saturday the service must be made before two o'clock P. M., otherwise to be deemed as made on Monday.

Affidavits.

118. Every affidavit in any suit or proceeding on the revenue side of the court shall be drawn up in the first person, and shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and as nearly as may be shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject. No costs shall be allowed for any affidavit, or part of an affidavit, substantially departing from this rule.

119. Where a special time is limited for filing affidavits, no affidavit filed after that time shall be made use of in court, or before the Queen's Remembrancer, unless by leave of the court or a judge.

120. No rule which the court has granted upon the foundation of any affidavit shall be of any force, unless such affidavit shall have been actually made before such rule was moved for, and produced in court at the time of making the motion.

121. All affidavits in revenue matters used before a judge out of court shall be filed with the Queen's Remembrancer, and such affidavits shall forthwith be delivered to the Queen's Remembrancer in order to be filed.

122. No party shall be required to take an office copy of his own affidavit, or be permitted to inspect or take an office copy of any affidavit for a capias to hold to bail, except by order of the court or a judge.

Satisfaction Warrant and Nolle Prosequi.

123. The form of the satisfaction warrant may be in Form 9, Schedule (C.), in the Schedule hereto annexed, or as near thereto as the case may admit of; the same shall be engrossed on parchment, and indorsed by the solicitor of the department from whence the proceedings emanated, afterwards signed by the Attorney-General, and then filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office. The nolle prosequi may be in Form 14, Schedule (C.); the same must be engrossed on parchment, and, after being signed by the Attorney-General, filed in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

Land Tax Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 58.

124. In any application to the court under this act, where the Crown is not a party, the order is to be drawn up, and the proceedings are to take place, on the plea side of the court.

Warrants of Nisi Prius and Tales.

125. The record of Nisi Prius may be made up without any warrant of Nisi Prius being obtained, and tales may be prayed on behalf of the Crown without any warrant for that purpose.

Letters-patent appointing Commissioners of Customs, and Writs of Assistance.

126. Letters-patent appointing the Commissioners of Customs are to be inrolled in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office; but the writ of assistance is to be prepared and issued in the same manner as other writs.

Writs of Summons for Recovery of Legacy or Successions Duty.

127. A full præcipe of the names of all the parties in these cases shall be sufficient without leaving a full copy of the writ; such writ shall be in force six calendar months, but may be renewed by resealing as a subpoena ad respondendum.

[For form of writ see Schedule (A.), No. 12.]

Special Cases from Magistrates or Quarter Sessions; also Special Cases under the Stamp Act.

128. The above special cases are to be filed as at present, but not inrolled, unless the inrolment be necessary after giving judgment, when the same is to be prepared in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

Writs of Levavi Facias against Defaulters and Collectors.

129. When writs against either of the above parties are brought to the office to be sealed, there shall at the same time be filed the certificate of the receiving officer or other party, together with the affidavit and fiat for process to issue.

Trials at Bar.

130. Where any trial at bar is to take place, in addition to the respective pleadings being delivered between the parties, each party is to file a copy of his pleadings at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office for the purpose of being inrolled. The trial is to take place on the roll.

Exemplification of Records.

131. Any matter required to be exemplified shall be inrolled in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, and the exemplification prepared therein, as at present.

Payment of Money into Court, &c.

132. The party wishing to pay money into court, either under act of Parliament or by order of court or a judge, must apply at the office of the Queen's Remembrancer for a "direction" to do so, which direction must be taken to the Bank of England, and the money there paid in. After payment, the receipt obtained from the Bank of England must be filed at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

133. If the money is to be invested, paid out, or otherwise disposed of, an order of the court or a judge must be obtained for that purpose, upon notice to the opposite party.

134. The orders relating to the above matters are to be drawn up in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office.

Setting down Special Verdicts, Petitions, Demurrers, &c. for Argument before the Court.

135. All special verdicts, special cases, demurrers, and petitions shall be set down for argument, at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, four clear days before the day on which the same are to be argued, and notice given forthwith to the other party.

136. Four clear days before the day of argument, two copies of the special verdict, special case, demurrer, or petition, with the points to be insisted on, are to be delivered, by the solicitor of the department or other attorney, to the Lord Chief Baron and senior baron of the court, and two other copies of such document are to be delivered, by the opposite party, to the barons next in seniority; and in default thereof by either party, the other party may, on the day following, deliver such copies as ought to have been so delivered by the party making default, and the court may make such order as to the hearing such argument, and as to costs or otherwise, as they may think fit.

137. When there shall be a demurrer to part only of the information (or pleading) or other subsequent pleadings, those parts only of the information (or pleading) and pleadings to which such demurrer relates shall be copied into the demurrer books.

Miscellaneous.

138. The Queen's Remembrancer's Offices shall be open in term time from eleven o'clock in the forenoon till four o'clock in the afternoon, and not in the evening; and in the vacation, from eleven o'clock in the forenoon till three o'clock in the afternoon; except between the 10th August and the 24th October, when they are to be open from eleven in the morning till two in the afternoon; and except on Good Friday, Easter Eve, Monday and Tuesday in Easter week, Christmas-day and the three following days, and such of the four following days as may not fall in the time of term, but not otherwise, viz. the Queen's birthday, the Queen's accession, Whit-Monday, and Whit-Tuesday, when the offices shall be closed.

139. On every appointment made by the Queen's Remembrancer, the party on whom the same shall be served shall attend, without waiting for a second appointment, or, in default thereof, the Queen's Remembrancer may proceed ex parte on the first appointment.

140. These rules, so far as the same may be applicable, shall be deemed and taken to extend to suits and proceedings at the instance of the Attorney-General of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales or the Duke of Cornwall for the time being.

141. All writs shall conclude with the date of the day, month, and year, without any other concluding words.

142. Excepting where at variance with these rules, or otherwise directed by the court or a judge, the present course of practice shall be pursued.

143. These rules shall not be deemed to apply to suits in equity.

144. Writs into counties palatine may be directed to the sheriffs of those counties respectively.

145. Where any deed or other instrument is directed by statute to be inrolled in the Court of Exchequer, the same may be inrolled without obtaining a fiat for that purpose, and shall be inrolled of the day, month, and year when the same was delivered at the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, with such introductory words as may be necessary.

146. That the foregoing rules shall come into operation and take effect on Wednesday, the 24th October, A.D. 1860; and with respect to any matter or proceeding then pending, these rules may (so far as they are applicable to any step or proceeding to be thereafter taken) be adopted and applied accordingly.

NOTICE.

It is right to mention that, with the exception of the leading articles, the contributions to THE JURIST proceed from various hands, and therefore may not unfrequently enunciate different, or even opposite, views on the same question. In deciding on the admission or rejection of a contribution, the Editors consider solely whether the subject is of a nature suited to a legal periodical like the present, and the article possesses sufficient merit to warrant their laying it before the Profession.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 9, 1861.

A BILL has been brought into the House of Commons by Sir John Trelawny to effect an important alteration in the law of evidence, by abolishing the objection to the incompetency of witnesses on the ground of want of religious belief. The circumstances which immediately gave rise to it are the following:—At a recent trial before the judge of the county court at Rochdale (Mr. C. Temple), the plaintiff, who was a female, presented herself as a witness; but it appearing, by her own admission, that she was an Atheist, the court rejected her testimony, and she was nonsuited. Early in the present session of Parliament Sir J. Trelawny asked the Home Secretary if he was aware of that decision, and whether, assuming that the judge had ruled correctly according to the existing law, he intended to take steps to alter it. To this question the Home Secretary having replied that he deemed the above decision to be in accordance with the existing law, but had no intention of proposing to alter it, Sir J. Trelawny introduced the present bill.

The actual law on this subject is, upon the whole, tolerably well defined. Any person who believes in a Supreme Being, the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood, and can be sworn in any form which he deems binding on his conscience, is competent to be a witness, however erroneous his religious opinions may be in other respects. Whether for this purpose belief in a future state of reward and punishment is indispensable does not appear to be settled, and indeed we are not aware of any case where the point has been raised. And here it is essential to advert to a dogma entertained by certain sects of Christians—i. e. Quakers, Moravians, and Separatists—and by some individuals not members of those sects, who object to taking an oath on the ground that in their judgment, founded on controversial reasons into which we decline to enter, the doing so is prohibited in the New Testament. By various statutes members of the above-mentioned sects; and persons who have been members of the two first of them, but have seceded; are allowed by law, in all cases, both civil and criminal, to make solemn affirmation in place of oath; liable, however, to the penalties of perjury if their testimony proves untrue. Other persons who entertain similar conscientious objections have obtained a like indulgence in civil cases, by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 20). Still the objection to competency on the ground of the want of religion remains in full force as regards the Atheist; and it is impossible not to perceive that his case stands on a peculiar footing of its own. In the case of persons who deny Christianity, but believe in some other form of religion, however erroneous, the great principle that the world is governed by a Power superior to man remains inviolate, and nothing is left but to ascertain the form in which the oath or affirmation should be administered. But Atheism, from its very nature, is a negation of all religion, both natural and revealed, and a denial of the existence of any such ruling Power, thus destroying one of the most effective sanctions for the truth of human testimony. But its evils and absurdities are far from ending here. "They that deny a God," observes Lord Bacon (Essay on "Atheism"), "destroy man's nobility; for certainly man is of kin to the beasts by his body; and if he be not of kin to God by his spirit, he is a base and ignoble creature. It destroys likewise magnanimity, and the raising of human nature; for, take an example of a dog, and mark what a generosity and courage he will put on when he finds himself maintained by a man, who to him is instead of a God, or melior natura, which courage is manifestly such as that creature, without that confidence of a better nature than his own, could never attain. So man, when he resteth and assureth himself upon divine protection and favour, gathereth a force and faith which human nature in itself could not obtain. Therefore, as Atheism is in all respects hateful, so in this, that it depriveth human nature of the means to exalt itself above human frailty." And its consequences to society have been thus well depicted by an eminent modern writer, Dr. Channing ("Importance of Religion to Society")—"Few men suspect, perhaps no man comprehends, the extent of the support given by religion to the virtues of ordinary life. . . . Once let men thoroughly believe that they are the work and sport of chance; that no superior intelligence concerns itself with human affairs; that all their improvements perish for ever at death; that the weak have no guardian, and the injured no avenger; that there is no recompense for sacrifices to uprightness and the public good; that an oath is unheard in Heaven; that secret crimes have no witness but the perpetrator; that human existence has no purpose, and human virtue no unfailing friend; that this brief life is everything to us, and death is total, everlasting extinction; once let men thoroughly abandon religion, and who can conceive or describe the extent of the desolation which would follow? We hope, perhaps, that human laws and natural sympathy would hold society together. As reasonably might we believe, that, were the sun quenched in the heavens, our torches could illuminate, and our fires quicken and fertilise, the earth. . . . Erase all thought and fear of God from a community, and selfishness and sensuality would absorb the whole man. . . . A sordid self-interest would supplant every other feeling, and man would become in fact, what the theory of Atheism declares him to be, a companion for brutes."

But however false, mischievous, and absurd Atheism is in itself, the question remains, whether it is a proper ground for rejecting unheard the testimony of a witness. So long as lawgivers acted on the principle that the refusing to hear a man's testimony in a court of justice was a proper punishment for violations of the law of the land, or for holding heterodox opinions in religion, it was but a natural consequence of that principle that he who was destitute of all religious opinions must necessarily be rejected also, as being in a still worse condition. But that principle is now completely abandoned among us, and it is generally considered that the only proper ground for rejecting the testimony of a witness unheard is, that, for some reason or other, his testimony is likely to prove false, and mislead the tribunal. Now, although an Atheist is void of the powerful inducements to speak the truth which are supplied by the religious sanction, he is open to those supplied by the natural and political sanctions; and consequently it would seem that the objection to testimony founded on Atheism ought to be placed in the same category with those founded on infamy of character, interest in the event of the suit, and others; which, after having been for ages looked upon as objections to competency, are by the more enlightened judgment of modern times considered as objections to credit, to be estimated by the jury.

If, therefore, the object of Sir J. Trelawny's bill were to attain these ends, i. e. the extending to criminal cases the salutary provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 20, relative to persons who entertain conscientious scruples against taking oaths in any shape; and the allowing Atheists to give their testimony, leaving their credit to be weighed by the jury; it would, we think, be an improvement in our jurisprudence. But the bill goes beyond this, and, if passed in its present form, will be productive of mischief, and lead to absurdity. It is intitled "A Bill to allow Affirmations or Declarations to be made instead of Oaths in certain Cases in Great Britain and Ireland;" and enacts, "If any person called as a witness in any court in Great Britain or Ireland, or required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition, shall refuse or be unwilling, from alleged conscientious motives, to be sworn, or shall express a desire to make an affirmation in lieu of an oath, it shall be lawful for the court or judge, or other presiding officer or person qualified to take affidavits or depositions, on being satisfied of the sincerity of such objection or of such desire, to permit such person, instead of being sworn, to make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration in the words following; videlicet, 'I, A. B., do solemnly, sincerely, and truly affirm and declare that an oath would not in my judgment oblige me more closely to speak what is true than my deliberate undertaking so to do; and I do solemnly, sincerely, and truly affirm and declare, &c.,' which solemn affirmation and declaration shall be of the same force and effect as if such person had taken an oath in the usual form, and shall in like manner infer the pains of perjury in case of falsehood."

The bill, therefore, provides one form of affirmation for two very different cases—first, "where the party refuses or is unwilling, from alleged conscientious motives, to be sworn;" and, secondly, "where the party expresses a desire to make an affirmation in lieu of an oath." Now, the form is not suited to the first of these cases, and is very different from that given in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 20, which runs thus:—"I, A. B., do solemnly, sincerely, and truly affirm and declare that the taking of any oath is, according to my religious belief, unlawful; and I do also solemnly &c. affirm and declare &c." And, as applied to the second of these cases, the form is open to still graver objection. A man may "express a desire to make an affirmation in lieu of an oath" for many other reasons besides that of his being an Atheist. He may—and many instances occur of this—have a most profound, even a superstitious, veneration for an oath, and yet have a most perfect disregard of truth when speaking without oath. Such a person would not have the slightest scruple in falsely declaring that "an oath would not in his judgment oblige him more closely to speak what is true than his deliberate undertaking so to do;" and he would embrace, with only too much eagerness, the means of evading its obligation thus considerably placed by the Legislature within his reach—with what detriment to the administration of justice it is needless to point out.

Reviews.

A Handy Book of Patent and Copyright Law, English and Foreign, for the Use of Inventors, Patentees, Authors, and Publishers; comprising the Law and Practice of Patents, the Law of Copyright of Designs, and the Law of Literary Copyright. By JAMES FRASER, Esq. Post 8vo., pp. 250. [Sampson Low.]

THIS little work fulfils the promise of its title-page; it is intelligible, convenient, and, as far as it goes, accurate. The general rules affecting patents are given in fifty-eight short paragraphs, with a clearness and precision not to be found in some works of greater pretensions on the same subject; and a separate chapter is devoted to the practical details. This part of the work is of course intended exclusively for unprofessional readers. The author's advice to exclude details from the provisional specification, lest rivals about to specify should obtain a clue to the invention, is founded on a misapprehension, for the provisional specification is not published until the time for completely specifying has expired. The information on colonial and foreign patent laws seems to have been diligently collated from the most recent and trustworthy sources, and may be useful even to professional readers.

The chapter on copyright of useful and ornamental designs contains nothing more than the substance of the statutes and official regulations. In a future edition the author would do well to state briefly the result of the decisions which throw light on the scope and operation of the statutes.

The chapter on literary copyright in England also is a mere analysis of the statutes relating to the subject. The effect of the International Copyright Acts is shortly set forth, and the duration of copyright in continental states is stated. There is a chapter briefly epitomising the opinions of the judges in Jeffreys v. Boosey, which might have been spared, because they have left the law on the subject in great doubt and confusion; and a lay reader is not likely to gather from the contents of this chapter that the point, and the only point, decided in that case was, that an alien resident abroad does not acquire a copyright by first publishing his work here.

Principles of Forensic Medicine. By WM. A. GUY, M. B., Cantab., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians; Professor of Forensic Medicine, King's College, London; Physician to King's College Hospital; Medical Superintendent of Millbank Prison, &c. Second Edition. With numerous Illustrations on Wood. Post 8vo., pp. 558. [Renshaw.]

WRITTEN in a concise style, and printed in a small type, this volume contains in little bulk a vast amount of information on every subject connected with forensic medicine—an expression more accurate than that which has been adopted into common use from the title of the first English book on the subject—Dr. Farr's Elements of Medical Jurisprudence. Dr. Guy's professional reputation is a better guarantee of the scientific merits of this work than any certificate of ours can be; but, as amateurs, we may say that the author appears to have taken the greatest care to embody in it the most recent discoveries in medical and chemical science. Such a work is of almost equal use to the medical witness and to the lawyer. The former will find collected in it that information which ought, indeed, to have been presented to him in the course of his studies, but which, not being of daily use in his profession, may have left an incomplete or faint impression on his mind; while the latter will learn from it what is within and what is beyond the scope of medical evidence, how to shape his questions, and often how to check and expose the testimony of an incompetent or dishonest witness.

An introductory chapter on medical evidence contains a fair summary of the rules of evidence, with general cautions and suggestions for the guidance of the medical witness. As supplementary to these general precepts, more particular "directions for medico-legal examination" are given, in connexion with the special subject-matter of each division of the work. The subject of unsoundness of mind is treated at great length, and with considerable ability and fairness. In common with most medical men, Dr. Guy condemns the wholesome test of criminal responsibility adopted by our law—the ability to distinguish between right and wrong; but he throws no new light on this question, resting his opinion merely on the assumption that no one should be accountable for the consequences of an uncontrollable impulse, forgetting that impulses, in the event uncontrolled, may have been controllable, and are not distinguishable on any sound principle from those of a similar character which are in fact controlled, while the object of criminal laws is "to compel men to control these uncontrollable impulses."

COMMON LAW NOTICE.

Judges' Chambers, March 1, 1861.

THE following regulations for transacting business at these chambers will be strictly observed till further notice.

Acknowledgments of deeds taken at ten o'clock.

Original summonses only to be placed on the file.

Summonses adjourned by the judge will be heard at half-past ten o'clock precisely, according to their numbers on the adjournment file, and those not on that file previous to the numbers of the day being called will be placed at the bottom of the general file.

Summonses of the day will be called and numbered at a quarter to eleven o'clock, and heard consecutively.

The parties on two summonses only will be allowed in the judge's room at the same time.

Counsel at one o'clock. The names of the causes to be put on the counsel file, and the causes heard according to number.

Affidavits in support of ex parte applications for judges' orders (except those to hold to bail) to be left the day before the orders are to be applied for, except under special circumstances; such affidavits to be properly indorsed with the names of the parties and of the attorneys, and also with the nature of the application, and a reference to the statute under which any application is made, the party applying being prepared to produce the same.

All affidavits read or referred to before the judge must be indorsed and filed.

Further time to plead will not be given as a matter of course.

Writ of Summons for Recovery of Legacy or Successions Duty.

Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, defender of the faith, to — greeting.—Whereas we have been given to understand in our court, before our barons of the Exchequer at Westminster, that you being — accountable part — within the true intent and meaning of the statute passed in the Parliament holden in the sixteenth and seventeenth years of our reign, cap. 51 [if issued under the Legacy Duty Acts, insert, and the Legacy Duty Acts], have been required by our Commissioners of Inland Revenue to render an account pursuant to the said statute [if under Legacy Duty Acts, and the said acts], and have made default therein: now we command you —, that (all excuses ceasing) within fourteen days from the service of this writ, or a copy thereof, you do deliver to the said Commissioners of Inland Revenue an account, upon oath, of —, and that you do within the same time pay the duty chargeable —; or that you, the said —, do within the said time appear before the barons of our said Exchequer at Westminster, and shew cause why you make default in the premises, and this you — are in nowise to omit, upon pain of process of contempt issuing against your person for your neglect herein.

FORM NO. 13.

Writ of Inquiry to ascertain Amount of Profits or Damages.

Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, defender of the faith, to the sheriff of the county of —, greeting.—Whereas our Attorney-General on our behalf hath lately, in our Court of Exchequer at Westminster, filed an information against A. B. for [state the substance of the information, exclusive of the conclusion, then proceed thus]: and the said Attorney-General hath claimed on our behalf £—; and such proceedings were thereupon had in our said court, that we ought to recover against the said A. B. our damages on occasion of the premises; but because it is unknown to our said court what damages we have sustained in that behalf, therefore we command you, that, by the oath of twelve good and lawful men of your bailiwick, you diligently inquire what damages we have sustained on occasion of the premises aforesaid, and that you send to the barons of our Exchequer at Westminster, on the — day of — now next ensuing, the inquisition which you shall thereupon take, under your seal, and the seals of those by whose oath you shall take that inquisition, together with this writ.

Witness —, at Westminster, the — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

SCHEDULE (B.)

The forms in the following judgments are to be used when there is no entry on the roll. When a roll is carried in, the proceedings, with the dates when they arose, must be entered on the roll; and the judgment in that case, from the words "Therefore it is considered," in the following forms, may be adapted to the particular case.

Form of Judgment by Default, &c. to Subpoena.

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Tests of writ.]

Middlesex, to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of subpoena issued forth of this court against A. B., at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty, for [state shortly for what the writ is issued].

[For want of appearance, thus:]

And whereas the said A. B. was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, duly served with the said writ, but hath made default in appearing thereto, and thereupon an information, numbered —, was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, filed against him in this court: therefore &c. [judgment as after set out.]

[For want of plea, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, but hath made default in pleading to the information, numbered —, filed against him in this court on the — day of —, A. D. 18—: therefore &c. [judgment as after set out.]

[Withdrawal of plea, as in first form to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and afterwards pleaded to the information, numbered —, filed against him in this court on the — day of —, A. D. 18—; and on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the defendant withdrew such plea: therefore &c. [judgment as after set out.]

[Confession to information, as in first form to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, on the — day of —, the said A. B., by —, his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and on the — day of — confessed to the information, numbered —, filed in this court against him on the — day of —, A. D. 18—.

[For debt or duties.]

Therefore it is considered that her Majesty do recover against the said A. B. the several sums of money in the said information mentioned, amounting together to the sum of £— [or the sum of £— in the said information mentioned. If costs taxed in any case, conclude thus, or as near as may be:] and also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—.

[For penalties.]

Therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the offence [or several offences] in the said information mentioned, and that he do for his said offence [or offences] forfeit the sum of £— [or the several sums of money, amounting together to the sum of £—] in the said information also mentioned, and that her Majesty do recover against the said A. B. the said sum of £— [if costs taxed, proceed as in preceding form.]

[Penalties and duties.]

Therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the several offences in the first, second, and third counts [or as the case may be] of the said information mentioned, and that he do for his said offences forfeit the several sums in those counts respectively mentioned, amounting to the sum of £—, and that her Majesty do recover against the said A. B. the said sum of £—, and also the several sums of money in the fourth, fifth, and sixth counts [or as the case may be] of the said information mentioned, amounting to the sum of £—, which sums together make the sum of £— [if costs taxed, proceed as in first form.]

[For intrusion, to remove persons intruding:]

Therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the entry, intrusion, and making entry in the said information mentioned, and that he be removed from the possession of — in the said information mentioned [if fine sought to be recovered, these words may be inserted], and that the said A. B. be taken by his body to make fine with our lady the Queen for his said entry and intrusion.

[When judgment by default is signed in respect of part only of the premises:]

Therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the entry, intrusion, and making entry on part of the premises in the said information mentioned; that is to say [describe the part]; and that he be removed from the possession of the said [describe the part as before] in the said information mentioned [conclude as before.]

[For form of interlocutory and final judgment in intrusion to recover profits or damages, see post, p. 102.]

Form of Judgment when Proceedings are by Capias.

[For Non-appearance after Service of Information in Gaol.]

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Tests of writ.]

Middlesex, to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of capias issued forth of this court against A. B., at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty, for the forfeiture of the sum of £—* [or as the case may be]; and whereas the said A. B. hath been arrested by virtue of the said writ, and taken to prison by the sheriff of the county of —, and, neglecting to give bail to the said sheriff for his appearance in this court, an information, numbered —, was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, filed therein against the said A. B., a copy of which information was served upon him on the — day of —, A. D. 18—; and the said A. B. still neglecting to appear here in court, or plead to the said information for twenty days after such service; therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the several offences in the said information mentioned, and that he do for his said offences forfeit the several sums of money in the said information mentioned, amounting together to the sum of £—, and that her Majesty do recover against the said A. B. the said sum of £—, [if costs taxed, proceed], and also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—.

[If for debt or duties, the same form of judgment, from the words "therefore, &c.," may be used as is mentioned under the previous head of "judgment by default to sub-pena."]'

[For want of appearance after giving bail to sheriff, as in preceding form to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas the said A. B. was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, arrested by the sheriff of the county of —, by virtue of the said writ, but hath made default in appearing thereto; and thereupon an information, numbered —, was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, filed against him in this court: therefore, &c. [conclude as before.]

[For want of plea, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and put in special bail herein, but hath made default in pleading to the information, numbered —, filed against him on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, in this court: therefore, &c. [conclude as before.]

[On withdrawal of plea, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and put in special bail herein, and afterwards pleaded to the information, numbered —, filed against him in this court on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the defendant withdrew such plea: therefore, &c. [conclude as before.]

[Confession to information, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by —, his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, confessed to the information, numbered —, filed in this court against him on the — day of —, A. D. 18—: therefore, &c. [conclude as before.]

Form of Judgment by Default for Want of Appearance to Scire Facias, Plea, &c., and after Verdict.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Tests of writ.]

Middlesex [or county], to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of scire facias issued forth of this court against A. B. for the recovery of the sum of £—, the penalty of a certain bond given to her Majesty by the said A. B., bearing date the — day of —, A. D. 18—, [or state the substance of the writ *]: and whereas the said A. B. was on the — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—, duly served with the said writ, but hath made default in appearing thereto: therefore it is considered that her Majesty recover against the said A. B. the said sum of £— in the said writ of scire facias mentioned, and [if costs taxed, proceed] also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—.

[For want of plea, rejoinder, or not joining in demurrer, &c., as in preceding form to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney [or in person], entered an appearance to the said writ, but hath made default in pleading thereto, ["or" rejoining to the replication of her Majesty's Attorney-General, "or" joining in the demurrer to her said Majesty's Attorney-General to the — of the said defendant:] therefore, &c. [as in preceding form.]

[Withdrawal of plea, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney [or in person], entered an appearance to the said writ, and afterwards pleaded thereto; and on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, withdrew such plea: therefore, &c. [as before.]

[Confession to scire facias, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by —, his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, confessed thereto: therefore, &c. [as before.]

[After verdict, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney [or in person], entered an appearance to the said writ, and pleaded thereto: and whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, on a verdict of the country, the said A. B. was found indebted to her Majesty in the sum of £— in the said writ of scire facias mentioned: therefore, &c. [as before.]

[If for defendant after verdict, to asterisk *, then proceed thus:]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney [or in person], entered an appearance to the said writ, and pleaded thereto: and whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, on a verdict of the country, the same was found for the defendant: therefore it is considered that as to the sum of £— in the said writ of scire facias mentioned, the said A. B. do go hence without day. [If costs taxed, thus:] And that the said A. B. do recover from the Crown the sum of £— for his costs of defence.

Form of Judgment on Information for Profits or Damages assessed on a Writ of Inquiry.

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord, 18—.

[Tests of writ.]

Middlesex [or county], to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of subpoena issued forth of this court against A. B., at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty, for* [state for what the writ issued.]

[For want of appearance, thus:]

And whereas the said A. B. was, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, duly served with the said writ, but hath made default in appearing thereto, and thereupon an information, numbered —, was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, filed against him in this court; and the said A. B. not having appeared, her Majesty remains therein undefended against the said A. B.: wherefore, &c. [as after.]

[For want of plea, as above to asterisk *.]

And whereas on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by C. D., his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, but hath made default in pleading to the information, numbered —, filed against him in this court on the — day, of —, A.D. 18—: and the said A. B. having made such default, and said nothing in bar or preclusion of the said information, whereby her Majesty remains therein undefended against the said A. B.: wherefore her Majesty ought to recover against the said A. B. her profits [or damages, as the case may be], on occasion of the premises; but because it is unknown to the court here what damages her Majesty hath sustained in that behalf, the sheriff is commanded that by the oath of twelve good and lawful men of his bailiwick he diligently inquire what damages her Majesty hath sustained on occasion of the premises, and that he send the inquisition, which he shall thereupon take, to the barons of our Exchequer at Westminster, on the — day of —, under his seal, and the seals of those by whose oath he shall take that inquisition, together with the writ of our said lady the Queen to him thereupon directed; the same day is given to her Majesty's Attorney-General at the same place; at which day comes here the said Attorney-General; and the sheriff, to wit, S. S., Esq., sheriff of the said county of —, now here returns a certain inquisition indented, taken before him at —, in the county aforesaid, on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, by the oath of twelve good and lawful men of his bailiwick, by which it is found that her Majesty hath sustained damages on occasion of the premises to £— over and above her costs of suit. Therefore it is considered that her Majesty do recover against the said A. B. her damages aforesaid by the said inquisition above found, and also £— for her costs of suit by the court here adjudged to her said Majesty, which said damages and costs in the whole amount to £—. [A capiatur profine may be added if necessary.]

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

Middlesex, to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of subpoena [or capias] issued forth of this court against A. B., at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty: and whereas on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, the said A. B., by —, his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and hath pleaded [or demurred] to the information, numbered —, filed against him on the — day of —, A.D. 18—: and whereas on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, on a verdict of the country, the said A. B. was found [if for penalties] guilty of the several offences, and each and every of them, in the said information mentioned; therefore, &c. [as post.]

[If in customs or excise, and the single value of the goods be found, proceed thus:]—And the jury found the single value of the goods in the said information mentioned to be £—; therefore, &c.]

[If for duties, indebted to her Majesty in the several sums of money in the said information mentioned; therefore, &c.]

[If on intrusion, here state how the verdict was found; therefore, &c.]

[If for damages, here state how the verdict was found; therefore, &c.]

[If special verdict.] And whereas on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, on the trial of this information, a special verdict was found by the jury; and whereas on the — day of —, A.D. 18— [when judgment given], on the argument of the said special verdict, the said A. B. was declared indebted to her Majesty in the sum of £—; therefore, &c.

[*After argument on demurrer, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:*]

And whereas on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, on the argument of the demurrer of the said — to the — of the said —, the said demurrer was allowed [or overruled]; therefore, &c.

[If for penalties.]

Therefore it is considered that the said — be convicted of the several offences in the said information mentioned [or, in the first and second counts of the said information mentioned, as the case may be], and that he do for his said offences forfeit the several sums of money in the said information also mentioned [or in the said first and second counts of the said information mentioned], amounting together to the sum of £— [if single value found, forfeit the sum of £—, being the treble value of the goods in the said information mentioned, or in the first and second counts of the said information mentioned, or as the case may be], and that her Majesty recover against the said — the said sum of £—, [if costs taxed, proceed thus:] and also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—.

[If for duties.]

Therefore it is considered that her Majesty recover against the said — the several sums of money in the said information mentioned, amounting together to the sum of £— [or the sum of £— in the said information mentioned], [if costs taxed, proceed thus:] and also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—.

[If for intrusion.]

Therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the entry, intrusion, and making entry in the said information mentioned [or, if for part only of the premises, describe the same as in p. 101], and that he be removed from the possession of — in the said information mentioned, [if fine sought to be recovered, these words may be inserted:] and that the said A. B. be taken by his body to make fine with our lady the Queen for his said entry and intrusion, [if costs taxed, proceed thus:] and that her Majesty do recover against the said — the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit.

[If for damages.]

Therefore it is considered that her Majesty recover against the said A. B. the said monies by the jurors aforesaid in form aforesaid assessed, and also £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said monies and costs in the whole amount to £—.

Judgment in part for Crown and in part for Defendant.

Therefore it is considered that the said A. B. be convicted of the several offences in the first and second counts of the said information mentioned [or as the case may be], and that he do for his said offences forfeit the several sums of money in the said first and second counts of the said information mentioned, amounting together to the sum of £—, [if costs taxed, proceed thus:] and also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—. And it is further considered, that as to the several other offences in the remaining counts of the said information mentioned, the said A. B. do go hence without day.

[*If for defendant, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:*]

And whereas on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, on a verdict of the country, the said A. B. was found not guilty of the several offences [or not indebted to her Majesty in the several sums of money, or in intrusion or for damages, according to the facts] in the said information mentioned; therefore it is considered, that as to the several offences [or several sums of money, or in intrusion or for damages, as the case may be] in the said information mentioned, the said A. B. do go hence without day, [if costs taxed, proceed:] and that the said A. B. do recover from the Crown the sum of £— for his costs of defence. [If on special verdict, the above form to be varied accordingly.]

THE BERKELEY CASE.—The House of Lords have rejected the claim of Vice-Admiral Sir Maurice Frederick Fitzhardinge Berkeley to sit in that House as a peer, with the title of Baron Berkeley, by virtue of holding the barony of Berkeley. The decision apparently proceeds on the ground that the right to sit in the Upper House per baroniam no longer exists.

Mr. Edmund Humphrey Woolrych has been appointed a magistrate at the Thames Police Court, in the place of Mr. Yardley, who succeeds the late Mr. Secker at Marylebone.

The Commissioners in Lunacy have (with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor) appointed the Hon. William C. Spring Rice, barrister-at-law, to be their secretary, on the resignation of John Forster, Esq., appointed a commissioner.

Unexpired term, 853 years. Ground-rent, 14l.

THE LAW LIBRARY of the late W. D. LEWIS, Esq., Q.C., embracing upwards of 1200 volumes of the best Works in Legal Jurisprudence, most complete series of Reports down to the latest times, Treatises, and Text-books, the celebrated Repertorium, and also the Collection of Notes in MS. compiled by Mr. Coventry, together with the valuable Copyrights of the same; also the Miscellaneous Library of about 500 volumes more, removed from his private residence in Kennington-square.

MR. W. MOXON begs to announce that he has received instructions from the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, at the Auction Rooms, 28, Chancery-lane, on THURSDAY, March 21, and following day, at 12, the TWO valuable LIBRARIES, the property of the above late eminent Barrister. The LAW LIBRARY, which will be sold on the first day, comprises a very large and complete collection of Reports in all the Courts of Law, including De Gex's, Beavan's, De Gex & Macnaghten's, Hare's, Adolphus & Ellis's, Ellis & Blackburn's, Manning's, Scott's Common Bench, Meeson & Welsby's, Hurlistone & Norman's, and the Exchequer Reports; Statutes at Large, and the Year Books &c.; Jarman & Bythewood's Conveyancing; Austin, Blackstone, Sugden, and all the best Works of Reference. Also the Copyrights of the two following Works, in MS., viz. the Repertorium, or General Index, shewing where every Case is originally reported, and where it is subsequently cited in the Reports, from the earliest period to the present time, in 3 vols. folio; and the Collection of Notes of Cases in Law and Equity, relating principally to Conveyancing, in note-books of convenient size, so arranged as to let in additions of newly-reported Cases and Statutes, thus avoiding future editions. These two Works have been prepared at a vast expense, and are well worthy the attention of the learned societies, authors and editors preparing works for the press, or extensive general practitioners requiring expedition and research. Also, on the following day (Friday), his general Library of about 800 volumes of classic, scientific, historical, and general literature, the greatest part handsomely bound, including the recent edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica; also sundry lots of office furniture.

May be viewed at the Rooms (Hammond & Elloart's) in Chancery-lane, and Catalogues had there, and of Mr. W. Moxon, Auctioneer, No. 3, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 16, 1861.

No branch, perhaps, of our laws, notwithstanding all that has been done, requires more amendment than our ecclesiastical laws, especially those relating to advowsons, presentations, and the exercise of ecclesiastical patronage. Take, for instance, the laws relating to simony. They appear to be made only to be evaded; and like all laws founded upon erroneous principles, they are full of patent and miserable inconsistencies. Whenever a cure of souls falls vacant every person must feel conscious that it ought to be committed to the charge of the most worthy person willing to accept of it. The patron who makes an improper presentation is, to a great extent, liable for the evil which may result from it. Unfortunately, however, churches are considered as property vendible under certain conditions in the market; and this has created much confusion in the minds of people, many of whom think that they have a right to do, as in the case of mere property, what they like with their own—with what they have become possessed by descent or purchase—quite irrespective of the feelings or interests, important as those are, of the people for whose welfare churches were built and are supposed to be maintained. What, for instance, can be more absurd than the law which allows the sale of a next presentation when the church is full, but forbids a sale when it is vacant? The evil is in allowing a sale at all. The only essential difference between allowing a sale of a benefice that is vacant and a benefice that is full is, that in the former case the value of the thing sold could be calculated exactly; in the latter case it cannot, as it depends upon an uncertain event—the death of the present incumbent.

Indeed, of the two, the sale of a benefice when full, independently of the law, is rather less defensible, as it partakes somewhat, perhaps, of a gambling transaction. This prohibition, however, of the sale “of vacant livings” is easily evaded. Suppose an incumbent dies before the owner is able to sell the presentation, all that he has to do in order to avoid the consequences of such an untoward event is to present the living to the most aged clergyman whom he can find ready to accept it, and the value of the living will be augmented in proportion to the age and decrepitude of the new incumbent.

Take, again, the law with regard to bonds of resignation. It was found out in the House of Lords that a bond given by a clergyman to his patron to resign at any time in favour of any person was void (The Bishop of London v. Fytche, 2 Bro. P. C. 211, Toml. ed.); and it was subsequently determined there that a special bond to resign in favour of one of two persons was invalid (Fletcher v. Lord Sondes, 1 Bligh, N. S., 144), upon the ground that the agreement under which the bond was given was simoniacal, and therefore void, as being a benefit to the patron, contrary to the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6.

Unfortunately the Legislature, after the last decision, rendered special bonds of resignation in favour of one of two persons standing within a certain degree of relationship to the patron valid. (See 9 Geo. 4, c. 94). This act calls rather for our regret than our surprise, inasmuch as so many members of our Legislature—at any rate, in those times—were interested in considering the presentation to advowsons to be a right of property to be exercised for their own private advantage, rather than a sacred trust to be administered most conscientiously for the good of the people.

The evils of bonds of resignation, even as now allowed by law, are of a twofold character. In the first place, in the words of an eminent judge, "The patron becomes thereby precluded from choosing the most proper individual for supplying the living. If he act in the presentation according to the condition of the bond, his choice is fixed long before the fitness of the object can be ascertained. At the execution of the bond the nominee may be at college, or perhaps at school, or perhaps in his cradle." (1 Bligh, N. S., 190). In the next place, the incumbent, who ought to be perfectly free and independent in order to be useful in his vocation, is put into a state of dependence upon the patron, only in some degree less absolute, and to that extent less mischievous, than formerly was the case when a general bond of resignation was exacted.

We think the Legislature would do well to retrace its steps—to render all bonds of resignation illegal. It might thereby set an example to lay patrons, and call somewhat forcibly to their minds that it is their duty not to consider that an incumbency is a provision for a relative, but that they are in duty bound to present the person who is best qualified for the place.

It will, however, we fear, be long before lay patrons, as a body, will be actuated by such sentiments, and greatly, we think, in consequence of the bad example set to them by ecclesiastical patrons. Thanks to the interposition of the Legislature, that excess of ecclesiastical nepotism which, in defiance of common decency and justice, gave living after living into the hands of a worthless and greedy relative, has, after long outrageous public opinion, been put a stop to. But still there is wanting a check upon the mode in which the bishops of England exercise their patronage; much and advantageously as it has been restricted, it ought to be still more restricted. Half-a-dozen livings, it is true, cannot now be conferred upon the same relation, but the best living in the diocese can, however unfit, either in point of age or experience, he may be for the charge. Many examples might be given of nepotism amongst prelates, which shew that some change in the law relating to their patronage is needed. Let it suffice to mention one of a notorious character which is at present much occupying, if we mistake not, the attention both of the laity and the clergy. We allude to the mode in which the Bishop of Durham has filled up the living of Haughton-le-Skerne. The living became vacant soon after the bishop took possession of his diocese, by the death of a Dr. Bandinell, at which time there was living in the parish a gentleman who had officiated as curate there for thirty years; and there are, we presume, in such a diocese as that of Durham, many men eminent for their intellectual attainments, for their piety, and for their zeal in the service of the Church, but who have hitherto received but small remuneration for their long and unremitting labours. One would have thought that some of such men as we have mentioned would have been selected for such a post. But whom does the Bishop of Durham select? A gentleman who has only been three years in priest's orders, and who appears to be distinguished in no other way than by being the son-in-law and domestic chaplain of the bishop; and no man can doubt that it was the relationship of son-in-law, and not his qualifications as a priest, which procured him, at so immature an age, the wealthy living of Haughton-le-Skerne. That such things are possible, and can be done by a bishop, in disregard of the duties of his sacred function, and in defiance of public opinion, shews to us conclusively that it is high time for our legislators to go a step further. They have to a great extent, though not altogether, extinguished pluralities; they may now attempt to abolish, or at any rate to mitigate, ecclesiastical nepotism.

Some go so far as to suggest that all livings above a certain value, of which bishops are patrons, should be placed in the hands of others less likely to attempt to convert them into provisions for their families—in fact, portions for their younger children; others, again, suggest that some check should be put upon them, rendering the consent of some ecclesiastical body necessary to all appointments by bishops—say, for instance, the chapter of his cathedral. For our part, we are inclined to think that a moderate, and at the same time an effectual, check might be put upon the improper use by bishops of their patronage by enacting that no bishop should give livings above certain values to any person who had not been ordained a certain number of years; for instance, no bishop should be allowed to give a living of 500*l.* to 700*l.* to a person who had not been ordained priest say six years; nor a living worth from 700*l.* to 800*l.* a year to a person who had not been ordained priest twelve years; nor a living worth from 800*l.* a year upwards to a person who had not been ordained priest fifteen years.

Of course, what we now propose would not prevent all abuses of patronage; it would, however, prevent some—such, for instance, as the recent case of Haughton-le-Skerne, which no person, we presume, can descend to the hypocrisy of defending upon any other principle than that which asserts that "might makes right."

Again: another abuse of no uncommon occurrence might well be taken into consideration with the view of applying a remedy. A person is appointed bishop who has scattered over the various dioceses of England numerous relatives by affinity or consanguinity, who are ministers of the Church, and therefore open to, if not anxious for, preferment.

The bishop takes possession of his diocese, and as living after living falls vacant, he fills them successively up with his relations foreign to the diocese. This is obviously acting with great injustice to his own clergy, who might fairly expect that years of faithful service would in time be rewarded by promotion within their own diocese.

This practice might, we think, be checked, if not extinguished.

Much as the bench of bishops might oppose the alterations in the law which we have suggested, at any rate so far as affects themselves, we think that they would be of the greatest benefit to themselves. They would to a great extent be relieved from the temptation to commit injustice to others by enriching their own relatives, and indirectly themselves, to the scandal of the Church and to the discredit of their sacred profession.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I write to inform you that on Saturday a petition to the Crown, praying inquiry into the effect of the present system of promotion at the Bar, was left at the Home Office for presentation.

The petition alleges, in effect, that the exercise of the prerogative in appointing Queen's Counsel is of no real service to the Crown, is injurious to the suitor, and operates with much injustice to other barristers.

It is presented on public grounds only.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
EDWARD WEBSTER.

THE BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL.

THE following remarks on the Bankruptcy Bill are extracted from a paper by Mr. William Hawes, lately read at the Law Amendment Society:—

"By the present law creditors' assignees are chosen, but experience tells us that the official assignee discharges the administrative duties of winding up estates better than a trade assignee; so that the creditors' assignee rarely interferes in the practical management of an estate, though he is always ready to advise with the official assignee. In what respect, then, will the proposed law insure the greater efficiency of the creditors' assignees than now exists, the services under both laws being without remuneration?"

"The creditors' assignee, by the new law, is to be chosen at the first meeting by a majority in value, as he is now chosen. Even now there is often a struggle for the choice of the creditors' assignee; not that the party named desires to act—and there is nothing in the new bill to increase that desire, but the contrary—but because the election carries with it the appointment of the solicitor to the estate. But this struggle under the new bill will be greater in proportion as the advantages to be gained are greater, for the choice will not only carry the solicitor, but that of the paid manager also. So that if there be a sharp canvass for this appointment now, what will it be when the duties, and therefore the profits, of the solicitorship are doubled? For no one will say a solicitor will collect bankrupts' debts so economically as the official assignee now does; and there is besides another paid officer to be appointed. The estate being thus placed in private hands, what security will there be against costs, and against unnecessary law proceedings? And in the country, where the assets have to be received by private persons and paid into private banks, what security will there be as to the regular accounting for all monies received?"

"Then, when the creditors' assignee is chosen, the estate is to be transferred from the official assignee to the trade assignee, except so far as debts under 10*l*. are concerned—a striking proof that the framers of this bill do not think their new machinery efficient for all the work required from it; and no information is afforded as to which assignee collecting debts is to have charge of the bankrupt's books—neither can do their work without them. There will be two officers collecting the debts of each estate—the larger number, though of the smallest amount, in most cases by the official or experienced assignee; and the smaller number, though largest in amount, often involving intricate legal rights, by the inexperienced creditors' assignee. Again: we now have an official assignee accountable to the court and to the creditors, and no other expense (except the bankrupt's accountant, which is the same under both) is allowed. He opens and closes the estate, and has no interest to encourage law expenses or to protract proceedings, and desires only fairly to fulfil his duty to the debtor, to the creditor, and to the public. But under the new bill we have an official assignee, at a fixed salary, to open the proceedings, and permanently to retain the collection of certain debts; then a creditors' assignee, carrying with it the appointment of the solicitor, who will charge for the collection of the debts as between attorney and client, and not a per-centage, as the official assignees now do; then a manager, to be paid out of the estate; and, lastly, when the creditors' assignees and the manager are discharged from their duties, the original official assignee is to be re-appointed, with his usual commission on collecting outstanding debts.

"We are to have an official assignee and a creditors' assignee—neither is to be trusted. The creditors' assignee is to a certain time to audit the accounts of the official assignee; and then the creditors' assignee is every three months to render his accounts, in the presence of the registrar, to the official assignee for his examination; no mention being made of that portion of the estate left in the hands of the official assignee, or which he may afterwards acquire.

"It appears to me, that under the plea of giving power to creditors to manage their own affairs, and of economising time and money in the management of bankrupts' estates, the framers of these clauses, in their desire to make some change, have done their utmost to complicate proceedings, to increase their cost, and to produce delay by taking the management of bankrupts' estates out of the hands of a few public officers, and placing them in the hands of hundreds of private and unqualified persons. It is evident that they have not been prepared by any one conversant with business in bankruptcy. What we require from reform in bankruptcy is, fewer forms, not more—greater simplicity of procedure, not less—and the fair representation of all interests involved in an estate. We want greater concentration, rather than increased diffuseness; we want estates to be placed in the hands of men whose sole business it is to expose fraud and to assist the unfortunate, to accomplish which requires experience and knowledge of business and of the world.

"I believe, then, that the practical effect of the proposed changes relating to the assignees will be beneficial to fraudulent bankrupts, but prejudicial to the public, and particularly to the general body of creditors. They will afford greater facilities for delay, on which fraudulent debtors depend to defeat justice and to conceal and gloss over their frauds, and will increase the expense and uncertainty of bankruptcy by the division of responsibility and the multiplication of forms. I believe that under the present system of official assignees their duties are discharged ably and conscientiously, and their appointment was hailed as a great boon to trade; and all that is required to make the present system as perfect as it is satisfactory is to give to creditors the right to select which official assignee they prefer, instead of being obliged to take one in rotation or by ballot. They collect the debts with great success and at small cost, and the public will be injured in proportion as the management of estates is taken out of independent and impartial hands, and placed in those from whom it was taken in 1832 on account of the then existing abuses, and where individual interests will often be in opposition to those of the general body of creditors and the public. I cannot discover a single form or element of cost dispensed with, but many are added; and in a bill professing economy it is singular that the salaries of the least-worked officers of the court, the registrars, should be increased 200*l*. per annum.

"I will now pass on to the next division of my subject—the transfer of bankruptcy business to the county courts.

"By clause 6 the judges of county courts are to exercise all the powers vested in and required of the commissioners in the district courts of bankruptcy. Besides these duties they have to discharge those belonging to their own courts, and for the two united they are to receive very inferior salaries to the commissioners in bankruptcy. The public, I fear, will therefore be apt to infer, either that the courts are inferior, and presided over by inferior judges, or that the business will be done in a less careful manner, which will necessarily lead to appeals (clauses 61, 74, 75) to the chief judge in London, to the waste of time and money; thus, in fact, bringing every case of difficulty, or in which delay is necessary to defeat justice, up to London for decision.

"By clause 106 all petitions for adjudication by traders not resident in the metropolitan district, whose debts do not exceed 300*l.*, may be filed in a county court; and by clause 119, on the vote of a majority in value of creditors, every bankruptcy, except those in the metropolitan district, may be administered in the county courts; so that after the passing of this act the county court will have full jurisdiction in bankruptcy, excepting for those in the metropolitan district, whether they be large or small. Let us inquire, then, what are the practical and every-day duties of a court of bankruptcy, and whether they can be properly discharged by the sixty county court judges and their 500 registrars sitting in the same number of country towns, where their courts are held.

- "1. The court has to take possession by its official assignee of the bankrupt's property, and to hold it safely.
- "2. To receive all monies, and to pay whatever may be necessary, which occasionally amounts to a considerable sum, and often requires considerable judgment and knowledge of business to decide upon, until the creditors' assignee is appointed.
- "3. To ascertain that the bankrupt gives up all his books, to take charge of them and to keep them safely, at the same time allowing the bankrupt free access to them, yet always under such supervision as to preclude the possibility of their being tampered with; and,
- "4. To provide a responsible messenger to take charge of and to remain in possession of the property at the debtor's place of business or residence.

"The present official assignees, having many estates under their charge, provide at their offices rooms for the safe custody and for the examination of the books, and clerks to see they are not altered or destroyed, and also proper and experienced messengers to take possession of property; and this extent of business enables them to keep their offices open at all reasonable times either to bankrupts or creditors, and secures the services of proper officers. In what manner will these important duties be performed when they are distributed among the 500 county court towns, besides those in which courts of bankruptcy are now established, each of which has a registrar, who is a solicitor, and who will become an official assignee?—and the bill provides for an increase in this number of court towns.

"There will be little more than one bankruptcy a year on an average to each court town, and from six to eight to each judge, if all the country bankruptcies are taken to county courts; but if any considerable portion go to the existing district courts, then the amount of business will be still less. What experience in the law of bankruptcy and procedure, or what knowledge of the ways of fraudulent bankrupts, or of the specialities of various trades, can be gained by the judge, or the registrar, and his officers, with this small amount of business? What probability does it afford for the speedy and economical discharge of the duties to be performed? How are complicated accounts to be examined and unravelled by persons without experience either as accountants or men of business, and how frequent, therefore, will be the grounds of appeal to the chief judge in London? It has hitherto been a condition of appointment, that the official assignees should have been in business. The registrars of county courts are solicitors, mostly entirely unfit, from education and habits, either to prepare complicated balance sheets or temporarily to carry on a business."

It is right to add that Mr. Hawes expresses his approval of other parts of the bill, and particularly of the provisions for arrangements by deed, with the exception of the direction to publish the particulars in The Gazette. In this approval we are satisfied that he is mistaken, because arrangements by deed will never be adopted unless the parties feel secure from official interference; but by the 203rd section of the bill it is provided, that in every case of arrangement by deed the estate shall be administered, on the application of any party, as in bankruptcy; so that a deed of inspection would operate merely as a declaration of insolvency. In short, the effect of the clause is to declare that an arrangement between a debtor and his creditors for a composition, or for winding up under inspection, shall be impossible.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

TRINITY TERM, 1861.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations; and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Trinity Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Thursday, the 9th day of May next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Thursday, the 16th day of May next, and will be continued on the Friday and Saturday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Thursday morning, the 16th May, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Friday morning, the 17th May, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Saturday morning, the 18th May, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Saturday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution as explained in chap. 8, part 3, of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the most important provisions of the Great Charter (on which they will find an excellent commentary in Sullivan's Lectures, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, pp. 343 to 381); with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History which contain an account of the Reigns of Henry VIII, Elizabeth, the Stuarts, William III, and Anne; with the State Trials of persons eminent in our history, from the time of Mary to the accession of Anne; with the History of the Law of Treason, Libel, and of the Tenure of Land.

He refers those candidates especially to May's History; the first volume of Lord Clarendon's History; the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th chapters in the third volume of Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy; to the close of the 23rd chapter of Hume's History, vol. 3, p. 296, 8vo. ed., the passage beginning, "Thus have we pursued the History of England," &c.; to the third volume of Millar's History; to the Preface to Gilbert on Uses, by Lord St. Leonards; the Preface to the State Trials; the 33rd chapter of the fourth volume of Blackstone's Commentaries (edition in which the text is preserved); to the 6th chapter in the fourth volume of Kerr's Blackstone; chapters 1, 2, and 3 of Mr. Justice Foster's work on the Crown Law; to the second volume of Parliamentary History; to the State Trials, vol. 3, p. 826; vol. 8, p. 549; vol. 9, pp. 488, 817; and Vaughan's Reports, p. 135.

All candidates will be expected to know the principal events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III; to have an accurate knowledge of the Reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, the Law of Treason, and the Act of Settlement.

THE READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books:—

1. Haynes's Outlines of Equity; Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; Hunter's Elementary View of the Proceedings in a Suit in Equity, part 1.

2. The Cases and Notes contained in the first volume of White & Tudor's Leading Cases, and the following Cases in the second volume:—Howe v. The Earl of Dartmouth; Peachy v. The Duke of Somerset; and Slooman v. Walter, with the Notes on those Cases; the Act to further amend the Law of Property and to relieve Trustees, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35; the Act to further amend the Law of Property, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, ss. 10, 11, 12; the General Orders of the Court of Chancery of the 1st February, 1861, and of the 5th February, 1861 (7 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 58); Mitford on the Pleadings in the Court of Chancery—Introduction; c. 1, ss. 1, 2; c. 1, s. 3 (the first six pages); c. 2, s. 1; c. 2, s. 2, part 1 (the first three pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 2 (the first two pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 3; c. 3.

Candidates for certificates of having passed a satisfactory examination will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for a studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

THE READER ON THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Joshua Williams on the Law of Real Property, 5th ed.

2. The Wills Acts, 1 Vict. c. 26, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, and the Notes to those Acts in Hayes & Jarman's Concise Forms of Wills, 5th ed.

3. The Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, and the Notes to that Act in Shelford's Real Property Statutes, 6th ed.

4. Uses and Trusts: Chudleigh's and Tyrrrell's cases in Tudor's Leading Cases in Conveyancing, pp. 200–276.

5. On Notice, as between Vendor and Purchaser: Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, 13th ed., c. 23, s. 2; c. 24, ss. 1, 2; Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 3rd ed., c. 15, s. 5.

Candidates for honours will be examined in all the foregoing books and subjects; candidates for a certificate in those under heads 1, 2, and 3.

THE READER ON JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW proposes to examine candidates for honours in the following books and subjects:—

1. The second and third books of the Institutes of Justinian, with the Notes in Sandars's edition, or the Observations in Cumin's Manual.

2. The Roman Law of Obligation (excluding the Obligations arising from Delict), as set forth in Warnkönig's Institutiones Juris Romani Privati, book 3, cc. 1-5.

3. Wheaton's International Law, "Rights of War as to Neutrals," part 4, c. 3.

Candidates for a certificate will be examined in—

1. The second and third books of the Institutes of Justinian, with the Notes in Sandars's edition, or the Observations in Cumin's Manual.

3. Wheaton's International Law, "Rights of War as to Neutrals," part 4, c. 3.

The READER on COMMON LAW proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined as to—

1. The Proceedings in an Action (Stephen on Pleading, 6th ed., c. 1, pp. 3-114), and in connexion therewith, sects. 1-40 of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852.

2. The Nature of Simple Contracts, Written Contracts, and the Statute of Frauds (sects. 4 and 17), as treated of in Lectures 2-5 inclusive of Mr. Smith's Treatise on the Law of Contracts, 3rd ed.

3. Stephen's Commentaries, 4th ed., book 5, "Of Civil Injuries," cc. 1 and 7-9 inclusive.

4. The Elements of Criminal Law, as set forth in Broom's Commentaries, 2nd ed., book 4.

Candidates for the studentship or honours will be examined in the subjects above mentioned, and also as to—

5. The Principal Rules of Pleading (Stephen on Pleading, 6th ed., c. 2, pp. 115-262).

6. Smith's Comp. Merc. Law, 6th ed., book 1, so far as regards "Partnerships," "Corporations," and "Principal and Agent."

7. The following cases:—

(a) Law of Contracts: Lamplough v. Brathwaite (1 Smith's L. C. 118, 4th ed.); Blake's case (6 Rep. 43); Emmens v. Elderton (4 H. L. C. 624); and Cornfoot v. Fowke (6 M. & W. 358).

(b) Law of Torts: Coggs v. Bernard (1 Smith's L. C. 147, 4th ed.); Armory v. Delamirie (Id. 256); and Mostyn v. Fabrigas (Id. 528).

(c) Criminal Law: Mackalley's case (9 Rep. 61); Reg. v. Bryan (Dears. & B. 265); Reg. v. Thurborn (1 Den. C. C. 387); and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54 (the Fraudulent Trustees Act).

By order of the Council,

RICHARD BETHELL, Chairman.

THE EXTRADITION CASE.

THE fugitive slave, Anderson, has been brought up before the Court of Common Pleas in Canada by habeas corpus, and been discharged out of custody by that Court, after a few days' time taken for consideration. We take the material parts of the judgment from The Toronto Globe of the 18th February, 1861:—

DRAPER, C. J., said—The prisoner is brought before us on a writ of habeas corpus directed to the sheriff of the county of Brant. The return of that officer shows that the prisoner was committed and is detained inclusively for the following causes:—First, upon a warrant by three justices, stating that he was charged, for that he, the said John Anderson, did, in Howard county, in the State of Missouri, on the 28th September, 1853, wilfully, maliciously, and feloniously stab and kill one Seneca T. P. Digges, of Howard county. Secondly, upon a rule of the Court of Queen's Bench of Upper Canada, on a habeas corpus, ordering that the said John Anderson be recommitted to the custody of the keeper of the gaol of Brant upon the warrant by which he hath been by him detained, to remain in the common gaol of the said county of Brant until a warrant should issue from the proper authorities of the United States of America, or of the State of Missouri, for the surrender of the said John Anderson, to be tried in that State for the murder of one Seneca T. P. Digges, according to the treaty between her Majesty and the United States of America, recited in the statute of Canada passed in the 23 Vict. c. 89, or until he shall be discharged according to law. The objections taken to the warrant of commitment were—

First, that it did not contain a charge of murder, but merely of felonious homicide; whereas the treaty and our statute do not authorise a surrender, and consequently not a commitment for the purpose of surrender, for any homicide not expressed to be murder.

Secondly, that it was not expressed to be for the purpose of surrender, but only until the prisoner should be discharged by due course of law, whereas the statute requires both.

Thirdly, that the magistrates had no jurisdiction unless and until the prisoner had been charged with the crime in the foreign country where it was alleged to have been committed.

It was objected to the rule of the Court of Queen's Bench that none of our tribunals, judges, or magistrates had any inherent or original jurisdiction over crimes committed in a foreign country: that the only authority in such cases is derived from the statute passed for carrying the treaty into effect; and by that statute, though power is given to judges and justices of the peace, it is given for certain specified purposes, and the courts of which the judges may be members are not empowered to do any one of the acts to effectuate the treaty.

During the argument it was further suggested that the statute makes the decision of the judge or justice of the peace, upon the sufficiency of the evidence to require or justify the commitment of the prisoner, conclusive, so far as that it cannot be revived by any other judge or court, though not necessarily conclusive on the Government, whose duty it will still be to decide, upon a review of all the circumstances, whether they will surrender the prisoner.

As to the matters appearing on the return to the certiorari, the objections may be classed under two general heads.

First, the insufficiency of the evidence to establish a case of murder.

Secondly, that enough appears to shew that, according to the laws of the province, the prisoner had not committed murder.

Upon the face of the warrant, and of the rule of the Court of Queen's Bench, it sufficiently appears that there is no jurisdiction in the province to try the prisoner on the charge stated.

The 1st section of an act passed in May, 1849 (Consolidated Statutes of Canada, cap. 89), reads thus:—"Upon complaint made, under oath or affirmation, charging any persons found within the limits of the province with having committed, within the jurisdiction of the United States of America, or any of the said States, any of the crimes enumerated or provided by the said treaty, any of the judges of any of her Majesty's superior courts in the province, or any of her Majesty's justices of the peace in the same, may issue his warrant for the apprehension of the person so charged, that he may be brought before such judge or such justice of the peace, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if at such hearing the evidence be deemed sufficient by him to sustain the charge according to the laws of this province, if the alleged offence had been committed herein, he shall certify the same, together with a copy of all the testimony taken before him, to the Governor, that a warrant may issue, upon a requisition by the proper authorities of the said United States, for the surrender of such person, according to the stipulation of the said treaty; and the said judge or justice of the peace shall issue his warrant for the commitment of the person so charged to the proper gaol, there to remain until such surrender be made, or until such person be discharged according to the law."

It is plain from this section that the proceedings for the arrest of a party, with a view to his surrender, may be commenced in this province, and the party so charged, i. e. upon complaint made before any judge or justice of the peace, may be committed, to remain in prison until such surrender be made. The third objection to the warrant appears, therefore, to want foundation.

The crimes specified in the treaty are murder, piracy, arson, and forgery, or the utterance of forged paper.

The warrant of commitment states that the prisoner is charged, for that he did wilfully, maliciously, and feloniously stab and kill one Seneca T. P. Digges.

This would be an insufficient statement, in an indictment for murder, in any of our courts, because it is equally indispensable to use the artificial term "murder" as it is to state that the offence was committed "malice aforethought." So much so, that, by the omission of either one or the other, the accused would be liable to no more than a conviction for manslaughter. But for the word "kill," this warrant would rather charge a malicious stabbing than any other felony, while the same word "kill" excludes the possibility of treating the warrant as provided on a charge of assault with intent to murder. It is true, that in the same warrant the same particularity is not requisite as in an indictment; and it is said, in effect (1 Hale, 122), that it need only contain the special nature of the felony briefly, as "for felony for the death of J. S.; and the reason is, that it may appear to the judges of the King's Bench, upon habeas corpus, whether it be for felony or not." But this rule, and the reason for it, do not govern a case like the present, where the jurisdiction does not extend to all felonious homicides, but is, on the contrary, limited to one kind of homicide, expressed by its technical name "murder." In the execution of a statutory power thus limited, the words of the statute should, I think, be adhered to, in order that, to adopt the language as above quoted, it may appear to the judges, upon habeas corpus, whether the offence charged be within the statute or no. In my opinion, therefore, the warrant is defective in not stating that the prisoner was charged with murder.

The next objection to the warrant of commitment is the omission in the conclusion to direct that the prisoner shall remain in gaol until his surrender upon the requisition of the proper authorities, or until he should be discharged according to law.

It is laid down as a general rule, deducible from and confirmed by numerous authorities, that where a man is committed in pursuance of a special authority, the terms of the commitment must be special, and must exactly pursue that authority. (Mash's case, 2 W. Bl. 805; Voxley's case, 1 Salk. 351; Bracy's case, 1 Ld. Raym. 98; Hollinshead's case, 1 Salk. 351; Baldwin v. Blackmore, 1 Burr. 602; Re v. Brown, 8 T. R. 26; Re v. Remnant, 5 T. R. 169; 2 Leach, 583; Re v. York, 5 Burr. 2684; Müller's case, 2 W. Bl. 861).

The case most resembling the present as to this point is that of Ex parte Besset (6 Q. B. 481), where one Besset was brought up on a habeas corpus, and the return shewed that he was committed by a warrant from the Lord Mayor of London, under the authority of the British statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, which was passed to give effect to a convention between Great Britain and France, closely resembling that between Great Britain and the United States. The objection taken to the commitment was, that it concluded, "and here safely kept until he shall be discharged by due course of law." The authority given by the act was to commit the person so accused to "gaol, there to remain until delivered pursuant to such requisition as aforesaid." The court held the objection fatal, and discharged the prisoner.

Our statute directs that the judge or justice of the peace "shall issue his warrant for the commitment of the person so charged to the proper gaol, there to be remanded until such surrender be made, or until such person be discharged by due course of law." Unless it can be held that the latter words include or are equivalent to the former, this case cannot be distinguished from that of Ex parte Besset. But we are bound to give effect to every word in the act, and it is too obvious to require argument that the Legislature meant to provide for the surrender of the prisoner, and for his discharge if his surrender was not duly required; with that view they made the double provision, some part of which has been overlooked and omitted in the warrant. I consider the warrant of commitment defective on this ground also.

The rule of the Court of Queen's Bench, however, which is returned to us as one of the causes of the prisoner's detention, is free from every objection of this character; and if the court had authority to make such a rule, it affords a complete answer to the application for the prisoner's discharge, unless upon the broader questions raised, which involve the discussion of principles of the highest character. But this rule is objected to as being beyond the power of the court, and I enter, somewhat unwillingly, upon its consideration. We are in effect called upon to review and supersede the action of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and not in an appellate, but in an ordinary character. But we have no alternative, for the prisoner has a right to the benefit of our opinion if it should be in his favour.

There can be no doubt as to the authority of the court, when a prisoner charged with felony is brought before them on a writ of habeas corpus, to look not merely at the commitment, but also at the depositions, before they either bail or discharge him, in order to see whether there is sufficient evidence to detain him in custody; and it is said in Re v. Horner (1 Leach, 270)—"The court in such a case never gave a judgment whether the facts amount to felony or not, but merely whether enough is charged to justify the detention of the prisoner, and put him upon his trial." (Re v. Marsh, 3 East, 157; Ex parte Page, 1 B. & Al. 588; Re v. Gordon, Id. 572; Reg. v. Richards, 5 Q. B. 926; Ex parte Cross, 2 H. & Norm. 354; In re Smith, 3 H. & Norm. 227).

The effect of the rule in question is, either to remand the prisoner on the magistrates' warrant, or to commit him by the authority of the court alone. Now, the rule does not profess to amend the warrant, and therefore the imprisonment rests on the inherent authority of the court alone.

This point merits full examination. We have the advantage of the decision already mentioned in the case of Ex parte Besset, which was not adverted to by any one concerned in the matter until after the writ on which the prisoner is now before us was issued.

Unless there be a difference between the British act and our own sufficient to create a solid distinction, this case is, in my opinion, decisive; and I perceive no difference worthy of notice, except that in the British statute justices of the peace, and other persons having power to commit for trial persons accused of crime, are empowered to take the proceedings pointed out against the supposed offender; while in our act any judge of the superior courts in this province, or any justice of the peace within the same, may do so. It cannot, I think, be successfully contended that these words confer any new power on the superior courts, though they do so expressly on the individual judges.

It is true, it does not appear in Ex parte Besset that the depositions were before the court; I infer they were not; but the language used by the judges expresses their opinion that they had no authority to look at them for the purpose of supplying any defect in the warrant.

The result is, that, in my opinion, the return of the writ of habeas corpus shews no sufficient ground for the prisoner's detention. He ought, therefore, to be discharged; and whatever conclusion I might arrive at on the more general grounds urged in his behalf, the result would be the same.

RICHARDS, J., said—There is no doubt that if the offence charged is not murder, then the prisoner must be discharged; and it is equally certain that the statute prescribes, that if the magistrates deemed the evidence sufficient to sustain the charge, they ought, amongst other things, to have committed the prisoner to the proper gaol, there to remain until he was surrendered, or until he was discharged according to law. If it had been charged against the prisoner that he did wilfully and feloniously stab and kill Seneca T. P. Digges, this would only be a charge of manslaughter. Does, then, the introducing the word "maliciously" into the charge shew that the prisoner is charged with the crime of murder? Two essential ingredients seem still wanting to make the charge clearly that of murder, viz. that the malice should have been aforethought, and the killing should have been alleged to be murder. The general definition of manslaughter being "the felonious killing of another without malice, expressed or implied," it would seem that the allegation that the prisoner did maliciously stab and kill Digges would afford a strong argument that the charge was not one of manslaughter. But the omission to charge the malice as "aforethought" may in the same way be urged to support the proposition that the charge is not for murder, which it ought to be to justify the prisoner's detention. As this proceeding is one taken under the statute, it can only be sustained so far as it is in accordance with the act. The words of Ashburton, J., in Re v. Judd (3 T. R. 256) seem to me peculiarly applicable. He says, "Whatever words the Legislature used, we must suppose that they knew the meaning of them; and if a justice uses the same words, we are bound to suppose that he intended them in the same sense, but if he makes use of other words he must be more precise." Here the justices have made use of other words, and as they are not more precise on this point, though not entirely free from doubt, I think the warrant bad.

As to the next objection, the omission in the commitment to direct that the prisoner should remain in gaol until the surrender should be made as required by the statute, Besset's case (8 Q. B. 481) is a strong authority in favour of the prisoner, and, unless we are prepared to overrule that case, we must consider this objection fatal. In Mash's case (2 W. Bl. 806) the doctrine, as to the necessity of inserting the words "until delivered by due course of law," is clearly laid down. But the omission of the words referred to suggest to my mind a still graver difficulty, and not one of a merely technical character. There is nothing before us to shew that the magistrates, "after hearing and considering the evidence of criminality," deemed the same sufficient to sustain the charge. That fact has not been certified to us, though it may have been to the Governor; and the statute says distinctly, that if, on the hearing the evidence, it be deemed sufficient by him (the magistrate) to sustain the charge, he shall, in addition to certifying the same, &c., issue his warrant for the commitment of the person so charged to the proper gaol, there to remain until such surrender be made, or until such person be discharged according to law. If, then, the committing justice or justices deemed the evidence sufficient to sustain the charge, the prisoner ought to have been committed for the purpose of being surrendered. If they did not declare that they had so committed him, what evidence have we that their adjudication was unfavourable to the prisoner? The only proper way of proving that they had so decided in this case, in the way it is now before us, is by shewing that they had issued such a warrant as the statute requires to follow from such a decision. The warrant shewn does not do this, and the omission is an important part of it. I cannot say that I have any doubt that the warrant is bad on this ground.

The next point for consideration is, whether the order of the Court of Queen's Bench, recommitting the prisoner to the custody of the gaoler of the county of Brant until a warrant shall issue for the surrender of the prisoner to be tried in the State of Missouri for the murder of Digges, &c., supplies the deficiencies in the former warrant, and makes his present detention lawful. No doubt, if any offence against the law of the Queen, and triable by our laws, appeared sufficiently made out against a prisoner seeking his discharge on a habeas corpus, though the warrant of commitment was defective, the court, in its discretion, might order his detention for trial, because, under these circumstances, there would be no doubt of their jurisdiction as a court over the offence. But here there is no jurisdiction given to the court, as such, to commit the prisoner to be surrendered. That must be done by the justice or judge who may have heard and considered the evidence of criminality. Any one of the judges of the superior courts undoubtedly has power under the statute to issue a warrant, and bring the party accused before him, and to consider the evidence of criminality, in the same way as a justice of the peace. But this power is only bestowed on the judges individually; it is not known to the court as such. Having arrived at the conclusion that the prisoner is entitled to his discharge on the objections taken to the form of the warrant, I do not think we ought to detain him in custody until the Court are prepared to decide the other questions raised upon the argument, which we are not in a position to do at present.

HAGARTY, J., said—I am of opinion that our provincial statute allows the proceedings to be commenced by the complainant on oath before the justice of the peace, without proof of a charge pending in the foreign State. Whatever may be our view of the offence apparent in the depositions, I think we are bound to see if the prisoner be detained on a charge which the statutable authority, the examining justice, has deemed sufficiently sustained as to some one of the crimes mentioned in the extradition treaty; and if it do not appear that such (quasi) adjudication has been already made by such authority, I do not understand that either of the superior courts can assume the task of examining the depositions, and judge them sufficient to sustain the charge. That duty, I think, is cast elsewhere, and must be performed by the committing justice. He is to be satisfied that one of the statutable offences is made out, and he must certify the result at which he has arrived. It is not that the Court may think his materials warranted his arriving thereat, or that he should have done so. He must do so himself, and we cannot, I think, do it for him. He must declare, in unequivocal language, that a charge, for example, of murder is made out. The statute directs him to certify his finding, with a copy of the testimony, to the Governor; and I presume it then rests with the Queen's Government, on a view of the case, to assume the responsibility of further action. In the absence of a positive finding by the justice as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain one of the statutable offences, I am of opinion that the whole case fails, and that no legal authority exists to correct or supply the defect. In this case the only evidence before us of any such finding is the warrant. The charge there expressed is, that the prisoner, in a foreign country, "wilfully, maliciously, and feloniously stabbed and killed Digges." Does this clearly declare a crime under the extradition treaty, viz. murder? I am of opinion that the magistrate had no right to substitute any words of his own if he intended to commit for a well-known crime mentioned by a well-known name in the treaty, and require us to assume that he meant the crime of murder by these expressions. It is abundantly clear that an indictment for murder so worded would be bad; and although the introduction of the word "maliciously" would be unsuitable in an indictment for manslaughter, I do not see how that can help the case. In commitments for trial for offences in our own country the depositions can be referred to if the warrant be defective, and if they shew substantially what the crime is, they can be still detained. The case cited of Rex v. Marsh, and subsequent authorities, amply support this. (Rex v. Remnant, 5 T. R. 16; Ex parte Bartlett, 7 Jur. 649). It is readily conceded that a commitment need not be so certain as an indictment, but it ought to be sufficiently certain to shew that an offence has been committed in the ordinary case, and that it would mean an offence cognisable by our courts here; it must distinctly shew one of the statutable crimes; and if my view be correct, we cannot seek to gather that result from the evidence, as the statute throws that duty on the committing justice. (Rex v. Judd, 2 T. R. 256; 5 T. R. 869). It seems to me, that from the nature of this proceeding, all reasonable particularity should be required in the instrument under which the prisoner is detained, that nothing should be left to conjecture, and that the charge should be explicit, and independent of all aid from the depositions. I think we are far from insisting on mere technical exactness in requiring every person intended to be charged with murder to have the crime named as such; its universal and indispensable description in indictments does not intend against the prisoner that murder is charged by words which in an indictment could only warrant a conviction for manslaughter, if good even for that lesser crime. If this Court cannot look at the depositions to support this warrant, the necessity of a strict construction of the latter is indispensable. The warrant or authority to declare is, as it were, the indictment or legal record of the prisoner's crime, so far, at least, as this country is concerned. The case of Besset seems to indicate the opinions of the Court, that they could not look beyond the warrant. Murder is emphatically, as the books call it, "a term of art;" and I am not willing to dispense with its presence in a document of such overwhelming importance to this prisoner's life and liberty as this warrant necessarily is under the construction given to it, and to the Court's jurisdiction over it, by the case just cited. I am also of opinion that the conclusion of the warrant is defective, although our provincial act had the alternative which the statute governing Besset's case had not. The statute directs a commitment to gaol for a special purpose, viz. extradition, and not as in a common case of an indictable offence, where the legal deliverance shall surely come as a gaol delivery. I think that the commitment should have strictly pursued the words of the act, which alone gave it any authority. I do not consider that the order of the Court of Queen's Bench affects the right of the prisoner to ask his discharge from a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction; he now stands remanded on the original warrant, not as in Rex v. Marsh, discharged from custody on the defective warrant, and committed by the court of its original authority. If the warrant be bad, everything falls with it.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 23, 1861.

In a former article we stated it to be our opinion that the decision of the Lords Justices in Alexander v. Brame (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1032; 7 De G., Mac., & G. 384), reversing the decision of Sir J. Romilly, M. R., went far to repeal, or at any rate to render useless, the provisions of the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, commonly called the Mortmain Act. We observed, that assuming Alexander v. Brame to be rightly decided, it was clear that the law was in a very anomalous state, and that even where no evasion of the Mortmain Act was intended, the Legislature would act wisely by extending its operations, so as to prevent the repetition of such cases as Alexander v. Brame.

We are glad to see that the decision of the Lords Justices has been reversed by the House of Lords (nom. Jeffries v. Alexander, 7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 221), and that the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, after having exercised for a century and a quarter so beneficial an influence in this country, has not undergone what would in fact have amounted to a judicial repeal. With a view to an examination of the decision of the House of Lords, we will again briefly call attention to the facts of the case. A Mr. Brame about five years before his death executed a deed of covenant (containing no power of revocation), whereby he covenanted with a Mr. Alexander, that he would in his lifetime, or that his executors should within twelve months after his decease (but subject and without prejudice to the payment and discharge out of his assets of all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and of any bequest he might make by his will, or any codicil thereto), invest 60,000*l.* in Consols, in the names of trustees, to be held by them upon certain charitable trusts. The deed was not enrolled. The property left by the covenantor at his death consisted almost entirely of personalty savouring of realty—mortgages for terms of years. The common-law judges, who attended to assist the House of Lords, were equally divided in their opinions upon the question submitted to them by the House, viz. assuming the validity of the deed of covenant, whether the sum of 60,000*l.* was payable from the proceeds of the chattels real of the covenantor, there being no other assets from which the payment could be made? The majority, however, of the House of Lords, consisting of the Lord Chancellor (Lord Campbell), Lord St. Leonards, and Lord Kingsdown (Lord Cranworth and Lord Wensleydale dissenting), determined the question in the negative, and consequently reversed the decision of the Lords Justices.

It was admitted by all their Lordships that the deed of covenant was valid, and that the covenant might have been enforced against pure personalty. Lord Cranworth, and also Lord Wensleydale, considered it as purely a legal question, and that the statute did not prohibit such a covenant being enforced at law against real estate, or assets partaking of the nature of realty; that it did not amount to a "gift" within the meaning of the act, nor yet to a "charge" on land, for no charge was created by the covenantor in his lifetime, nor did one arise upon his death. Lord Cranworth even thought that the enforcing of such a covenant would not enable persons to defeat the provisions of the statute. Lord Wensleydale thought it unnecessary to inquire whether the result of the decision, if in affirmance of the decree of the Lords Justices, would be that the statute would be extensively evaded or not. His Lordship, however, made one very important admission, which, with great submission, we think might have led him to a conclusion differing from that at which he ultimately arrived. He said, "that if it could be shewn that the real intention of the parties to such an instrument was different from that expressed, and was to affect the real estate, and the instrument was only a contrivance, or, as it is usually said, a machinery, to effect the object of taking mortgage terms, and handing them over to the trustees of the charity, it might be treated as in effect a gift or charge upon the real estate, and, being such, it would be avoided by the statute." The Lord Chancellor, Lord St. Leonards, and Lord Kingsdown were clearly of opinion that the covenant could not be enforced against the chattels real of the covenantor. Lord St. Leonards considered it clear upon the evidence that the covenantor meant specifically that the mortgages should remain after his death a fund to answer the charitable uses; and that being his intention, he could not do indirectly by deed what he confessedly could not effect by means of his will. He entirely differed from Lords Cranworth and Wensleydale, who thought the question might be determined at law, as, in his opinion, it depended upon the doctrines of equity, which, in the administration of the assets of the testator, would look at the whole nature of the transaction, and would consider the sum secured by the covenant not merely as debt, but in the nature of a legacy; and, looking at it as a legacy, it was clear upon the authorities that it was void, so far as it was payable out of chattels real. Lord Kingsdown took, if anything, a still stronger view against the covenant, which he looked upon not merely as a contrivance to evade the statute, and defeat the policy of the law, but he thought the mode of doing it—the act as well as the intention—was "in the teeth of the statute;" and he added, that he could not but think that if such devise was to take effect, the statute would be a dead letter.

We rejoice to observe that Lord St. Leonards, Lord Kingsdown, and the Lord Chancellor expressed themselves very strongly in favour of the policy of the act of the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, especially as there are some persons who disapprove of it, and think it should be repealed. The Lord Chancellor, moreover, as appears from his judgment, is in favour of extending it to all personal property; and we think most justly so too; for, if we admit the good policy of that protection which the act affords against the improvident disposition, by languishing and dying persons, of property of one kind, we cannot, with any shew of reason, refuse to extend it to property of other kinds. The act does not, be it ever borne in mind, prevent the disposition of property of any kind to charitable purposes; it merely regulates the mode in which it shall be given. No person, therefore, can complain that the law prevents him from being charitable now, as to one kind of property; nor as to all kinds of property (if the law was extended as proposed by the Lord Chancellor). All the charitable individual would have to do would be to comply with the requisitions of the law, and he might, if he so willed it, denude himself of all he possessed in the world. Those provisions, however, are such as experience has told us are well calculated to prevent undue influence at a time when a man, from various motives, is most likely to succumb to it, while they give sufficient scope to the well-considered and judicious exercise of real charity.

Other observations of the Lord Chancellor in giving judgment are, although we do not altogether agree with them, of considerable importance. He says that he should feel glad "if some reasonable limits could be put to the purposes for which property might be perpetually appropriated, and if some provision could be made for periodically reviewing charitable foundations, and remodelling them as it may be supposed the founder might have wished them to be remodelled could he have foreseen the change of manners and institutions which has taken place."

There is no doubt that some of the purposes to which property can now be devoted in perpetuity as being charitable might well be excluded from the operation of the law relating to charities. Indeed, some charitable donations to purposes of rather a ludicrous character might be mentioned. But then it must be remembered that the Court of Chancery or the Charity Commissioners, either separately or together, have full power, by a judicious scheme, to modify such charitable dispositions, by omitting everything which either is actually objectionable, or has an objectionable tendency. So, likewise, when from change of circumstances, either total or partial, the charitable intentions of the founder of a charity cannot be carried out at all, or not altogether in accordance with his intentions, the equitable doctrine of cy-près, without calling for the intervention of the Legislature, comes in aid of the general charitable intention, and will apply the funds either in support of some charity of an analogous character, or will modify the charitable institution itself, so as to meet with the altered circumstances and requirements of the age. We think that the Court of Chancery has carried the principles of the cy-près doctrine nearly as far as they can with safety be extended. The machinery of the Court or of the Charity Commissioners for carrying those principles into effect might, perhaps, with care, be improved; but there is great danger, not to say risk, of injustice being done, if the Legislature vest in any man or body of men, not bound, as our courts are, by well-known and well-recognised precedents, greater powers than they now possess, to change or modify, by a periodical review or otherwise, the charitable institutions of the country.

Lord Cranworth has, we observe, introduced a bill into Parliament proposing various alterations in the law relating to charitable donations. This we intend at a future time to examine, both with regard to the principles on which it may proceed, and the machinery by which it proposes to carry them out. We may, however, in the meantime, make one observation, that the decision of the House of Lords in Jeffries v. Alexander has rendered legislation upon the subject less urgent; and if it is deemed advisable to alter or extend the law, the change should be made only after great consideration as to the principles upon which legislation upon the subject should be founded, care being also at the same time taken that those principles should be embodied in language so intelligible that it cannot be mistaken; otherwise, with all its admitted defects, we had far better remain content with the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, so much of which has received a judicial construction, and is now very generally understood, if not entirely approved of, by the Profession.

COSTS OF ACTIONS IN THE SUPERIOR COURTS OF LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Mr. Digby Seymour has obtained the leave of the House of Commons to introduce "A Bill for the Consolidation and Amendment of the Law of Costs relative to Actions brought in her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record." Few members of either branch of the legal profession will be disposed to deny the importance of such a measure, but perhaps as few are fully aware of the real intricacy of the subject as it stands at present: possibly a concise description of the actual state of things in reference to this point may not be unacceptable to some of the readers of THE JURIST.

Persons uninitiated in the mysteries of legal practice naturally enough consider this a very simple matter. A. has a claim against his neighbour B., to enforce which he is obliged to have recourse to a court of law; he succeeds: as a matter of course, in addition to the claim which he has thus established against B., he ought to receive from him reimbursement of the expenses to which he has been driven for the purpose of asserting his right; or, on the other hand, he fails; it is equally plain that in this case he ought at least to pay B. the money which his resistance to an unfounded claim has cost him. This picture, however, bears a very slight resemblance to the stern reality. Under hardly any circumstances does the award of costs refund to the successful party the whole of the money which he has been forced to expend in the prosecution of his suit, and not seldom he does not even obtain this award. It is easy to imagine cases, where success in the action offers no criterion of the party's right to costs, but obviously this question ought to depend solely upon the facts involved in the suit, and to be entirely disencumbered of such entanglement as is due only to the combined operation of discordant acts of Parliament. A single example will shew how faulty in this respect is the condition of our statute law.

An action for slander was tried at the last summer assizes, in which the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 1s.: it subsequently became a question for the decision of the Court of Common Pleas whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to his full costs. (Evans v. Rees, 30 L. J., C. P., 16). The Court adjudged him only 1s., and Erie, C. J., gave the reasons for this judgment in the following words:—"I think that the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, does not conflict with the statute of James, so as virtually to repeal it, but that both statutes may stand together." [His Lordship read the 2nd section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24.] "I give that section its full application. The plaintiff in an action of slander has recovered less than 40s.; he is, therefore, to have no costs unless the judge certifies. The judge has certified, and the question is as to the effect of his certificate. I am of opinion that the effect of it is to take the case out of the previous enacting part of the section; and the plaintiff then has the same right to costs as he would have had supposing the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, had never passed. Then, by the Statute of Gloucester he would have been entitled to his full costs, unless that right was qualified by any subsequent right. His right is qualified by the statute of James, which says, that in an action for slanderous words, where the damages are under 40s., the plaintiff shall recover only so much costs as damages." Thus, after hearing a most learned and solemn discussion, four of the ablest judges in Westminster Hall felt themselves obliged to take the case out of the operation of a statute of Queen Victoria, which gave no costs at all, then to relegate it to that of a statute of Edward I, which gave full costs, and finally to put it under a statute of James I, which had the effect of giving one shilling costs! Where can be found any satire upon our system of legal procedure more severe than is afforded by this matter-of-fact piece of burlesque? Surely the time has come for the interposition of the Legislature: and, as all the law on the subject is the creature of statute, a very legitimate field for consolidation and amendment lies open before us. Let us glance at its extent.

Previously to the reign of Edward I, it seems that costs of suit were not given, totidem verbis, to the successful party in any suit. Lord Coke (2 Inst. 288) remarks, that "by this it may be collected that justice was good cheap in ancient times." However, his Lordship's inference is not inevitable, for there is little doubt<sup>a</sup> but that it was the practice in those times for the jury to form an estimate of the costs, and to include the sum, so arrived at, in the amount of damages awarded by them; moreover, if this estimated sum ultimately proved insufficient to cover the actual costs, the courts used to award increased costs. Still, wherever, as in real actions, the verdict of the jury did not take the form of damages no costs could be obtained.

To put things on a more satisfactory footing, the 6 Edw. 1, c. 1, commonly known as the Statute of Gloucester, was passed. The 1st section of this act gave damages in certain real actions to which they had not before been incident; and the 2nd section provided, "that the demandant may recover against the tenant the costs of his writ purchased, together with the damages above said; and this act shall hold place in all cases where the party is to recover damages." The words "costs of his writ purchased" were construed to mean all legal costs of suit (2 Inst. 288); and, with this interpretation, the sentence which follows them was held to confer upon the plaintiff in any action whatever, provided he recovered damages,

This statute still constitutes the only foundation upon which a plaintiff's right to costs rests: it does not, however, embrace every case in which a plaintiff may recover a verdict; for it has been determined<sup>o</sup>, in a somewhat narrow spirit, that a plaintiff who does not complain of a personal grievance, but sues, as a common informer, for a penalty imposed by an act of Parliament subsequently in date to the Statute of Gloucester, is excluded from the benefit of this latter enactment.

Notwithstanding that relief was thus given to a successful plaintiff, a defendant still remained without any corresponding benefit, until the reign of Henry VIII; when it was enacted (23 Hen. 8, c. 15), that in certain specified actions only, after nonsuit or a lawful verdict against the plaintiff, the defendant should have judgment to recover his taxed costs against the plaintiff. The last remaining inequality between the two parties was removed by the 4 Jac. 1, c. 3, which gave costs to the successful defendant "in all actions whatsoever wherein the plaintiff might have costs (if, in case, judgment should be given for him)." And, finally, the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 1, afterwards enlarged by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, placed one of several defendants who obtains a verdict while the plaintiff succeeds against the others, in the same position as to his costs, as if the verdict had been in favour of all the defendants alike. The operation of the latter of these acts, namely, the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, ss. 32, 33, was to extend the like benefit to an individual defendant when a nolle prosequi was entered as to him: but both these acts gave power to the judge at the trial to relieve the plaintiff from the costs of such defendant, by certifying upon the record that there was reasonable cause for making him a defendant.

So far legislation was confined to dealing with the costs of litigating questions of fact. But either party might defeat the other on a point of law: either the plaintiff or the defendant, conceding his opponent's facts, might demur to the legal results sought to be deduced from them; and if he succeeded in maintaining his position on this ground, certainly he had as good a right to be reimbursed his costs of suit, as if he had gained his point by disproving allegations of fact. This was at last recognised by the Legislature, and the 8 & 9 Will. 3, developed by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 34, gave the costs of a demurrer to that party in the action in whose favour it was determined.

Thus, at last, by the united force of the several statutes which have been cited, and which range in date from the reign of Edward I to that of William IV, is established, with a still imperfect generality, the right of the successful litigant to the costs which his adversary has obliged him to incur.

Might not the whole of this series of legislative enactments be advantageously condensed into one section of a consolidating statute?

So much for the costs of the cause. The costs of the issues are regulated by an entirely different set of enactments.

It might be imagined, from the terms in which the earlier statutes are couched, that the dispute between the plaintiff and the defendant must, as it appeared on the pleading, be necessarily single-headed. And yet this was not strictly the case: a plaintiff could always embrace several counts in one declaration, although the defendant was restricted to one answer to each of them, with the additional privilege, if he thought fit, of being able to divide into parts any count which admitted of being so treated, and then pleading separately to each part. Thus it frequently happened, by the act either of the plaintiff or of the defendant, or of both, that a plurality of issues between them arose for determination in the same action. If all these resulted in favour of the same party, the state of things was practically the same as if there had been only a single issue, and no difficulty on this account presented itself in the application of the foregoing statutes relative to costs. But it was quite otherwise when some of the issues were found for the plaintiff, and the remainder for the defendant. In the end the courts decided<sup>o</sup>, that if the plaintiff succeeded in any one of the issues thus raised he was entitled to the costs of the cause, without any deduction on account of those issues on which he had failed, and that the defendant had no right to any costs unless he defeated the plaintiff on all the issues.

So opposed were the decisions, establishing this result, to the real spirit of the preceding legislation, that the judges, under the powers given them by the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 70, framed the 74th rule of Hil. T., 2 Will. 4, for the purpose of placing the matter on the right footing. This rule declared, that "no costs shall be allowed on taxation, to a plaintiff upon any counts or issues upon which he has not succeeded: and the costs of all issues found for the defendant shall be deducted from the plaintiff's costs."

The disability under which a defendant laboured, of not being able to plead more than one defence to the same cause of action, was for the first time removed by the 4 Ann. c. 16; which empowered the defendant in any action, with the leave of the court in which it was brought, to plead as many several matters thereto as he should think necessary for his defence. But in order that this multiplication of issues might not be made the means of vexing a defeated plaintiff with unnecessary expenses, the following section of the act, as interpreted by the courts (Richmond v. Johnson, 7 East, 583; Howell v. Rodbard, 4 Exch. 309; and contra, Callendar v. Howard, 10 C. B. 302), gave him the costs of such of these double issues as he was fortunate enough to win, although beaten on the whole; unless the judge who tried them certified that the defendant had reasonable cause for raising them.

The effect of thus construing the 5th section of the statute of Anne is to confine its operation to the case where the plaintiff fails to establish the cause of action to which the double pleas are pleaded. The other alternative with reference to this cause of action, namely, that which embraces the plaintiff's winning or losing all the issues, is provided for by the enactments mentioned above in the 1st section. And as to the whole of the causes of action, which may be alleged, or separated from each other in the same declaration, and meet with very different fates, the 74th rule of Hil. T., 2 Will. 4, above quoted, regulated the distribution of costs.

This seems to have been the state of things up to the passing of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852: but the contrary decisions of Howell v. Rodbard (4 Exch. 309) and Callendar v. Howard (10 C. B. 302) certainly discourage a positive enunciation of opinion on the point.

The 81st section of this last-mentioned act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, after empowering both the plaintiff and the defendant, with proper leave, to plead double, provided, that "the costs of any issue, either of fact or law, shall follow the finding or judgment upon such issue, and be adjudged to the successful party, whatever may be the result of the other issue or issues." The 62nd rule of Reg. Gen., Hil. T., 1853, repeats this provision, and also determines, when there are issues both of law and fact, which party is to be entitled to the costs of the trial.

It is not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended by this enactment to clear up all the difficulties attaching to the distribution of costs where there is a plurality of issues: but if so, they have not used sufficiently apt words for the purpose, for it has been already held (Cameau v. Morrice, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 139) that the provision as to costs in the 81st section only applies to the issues raised in double pleading; that in fact it only explains, and does not repeal, the statute of Anne. We have, therefore, one more act of Parliament added to our list of those which regulate costs, with very little corresponding benefit.

It is not too much to say that this group of statutes and rules might be very conveniently and efficiently replaced by a carefully-drawn clause in a consolidation act.

As this letter has already reached a length which, I fear, is inconveniently great for the space which you usually allot to correspondents, I feel bound to close it at this marked division of my subject: at the same time, I venture to ask your permission to conclude my remarks in the next number of THE JURIST.

I am, yours &c.,

Another meeting took place on the 25th February, Charles Wordsworth, Esq., Q. C., in the chair, when papers were read by Mr. Edgar and Mr. Hawes on the Attorney-General's Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill. A discussion took place, which was adjourned.

PAYMENT OF WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

THE question of the alleged insufficiency of the payment of witnesses in criminal cases, under the order of Sir George Grey of the 9th February, 1858, has been brought before the House of Commons by Colonel Smythe, who asked the Home Secretary whether he was prepared to alter the scale of allowances fixed by that order. In answer to this question Sir G. C. Lewis said, "It certainly appeared that the present scale of allowances was complained of in some of the northern counties, but nevertheless from the great majority of counties no complaints had been made on the subject. A great diminution had lately taken place in the number of prosecutions, but this could not be owing to any reduction that had taken place in the scale of allowances to prosecutors, for the same falling off was observable throughout England, and in counties where no reduction of the allowances had occurred; and also in Scotland and Ireland. In those circumstances he did not feel justified in recommending a general increase in these allowances; but he was prepared to bring in a bill to enable any county that thought the allowances insufficient to make an addition to them out of the county rates."

RULES OF PRACTICE ON THE REVENUE SIDE OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Middlesex, to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of our lady the Queen issued forth of this court for the valuing of several parcels of [here set out the goods, or as the case may be] seized as forfeited by —, officers of [excise], and an information of seizure has been filed, praying that the said goods [or as the case may be] may remain forfeited; and by an Indenture filed in this court, numbered —, and made on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, the said [goods] are appraised at the sum of £—: and whereas no claim has been entered to the said goods [or as the case may be]: therefore it is considered that the said [goods] do remain forfeited, and that the same be delivered to the commissioners of —, or their assigns, to be disposed of according to the statute in that behalf.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Teste of writ of appraisement.]

Middlesex, to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of appraisement issued forth of this court for the appraisement of several parcels of — seized as forfeited by —, officers of —: and whereas, on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, A. B., of —, by C. D., his attorney, entered an appearance and claim in this court to the said goods [or as the case may be], and pleaded to the information, numbered —, filed on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, for the recovery of the same*: and whereas, on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, on a verdict of the country, the said [goods] were found to be forfeited to her Majesty: therefore it is considered that the said goods [or as the case may be] do, for the several reasons aforesaid, remain forfeited, and that the same be delivered to the commissioners of —, or their assigns, to be disposed of according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided; [if costs taxed, proceed thus] and that her Majesty do recover against the said A. B. the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit.

[If verdict for claimant, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, on a verdict of the country, the said [goods] were found not to have been forfeited: therefore it is considered that the said goods [or as the case may be] be delivered to the said A. B., or to his assigns; [if costs taxed, proceed] and that the said A. B. do recover from the Crown the sum of £— for his costs of defence.

Form of Judgment for want of Plea or other Pleadings, or after Verdict, or upon Demurrer to Extent or Diem Clausit Extremum.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Tests of writ.]

Middlesex [or county], to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of extent (or diem clausit extremum) issued forth of this court, directed to the sheriff of the county of —, against A. B., for the recovery of the sum of £— for — [as the case may be.] And whereas, by an inquisition taken by virtue of the said writ by the sheriff of the said county of —, and filed in this court, the said A. B. was found possessed of — [here set out the property (shortly) which is claimed]: and whereas, on the — of —, A. D. 18—, claim was entered by C. D., of —, by E. F., his attorney, to [the property claimed]*: and whereas default was made by the said C. D. in pleading to the said writ: therefore it is considered that the said [the property claimed] do remain in her Majesty's hands; [if costs taxed] and that her Majesty do recover against the said C. D. the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit.

[For not rejoining, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas default was made by the said C. D. in rejoining to the replication of her Majesty's Attorney-General: therefore &c. [as before.]

[For not joining in demurrer, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas default was made in joining in the demurrer of her said Majesty's Attorney-General to the — of the said defendant: therefore &c. [as before.]

[After trial, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, after issue had been joined in this cause, and on the trial thereof on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, a verdict was found for her Majesty: therefore &c. [as before.]

[On argument of demurrer, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, upon argument of the demurrer of the said — to the — of the said —, the said demurrer was allowed [or overruled]: therefore &c. [as above.]

[On withdrawal of claim, as above to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said C. D. withdrew his claim and plea to the property so claimed by him: therefore &c. [as before.]

[If judgment for the defendant, as before to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

And whereas, after issue had been joined in this cause, and on the trial thereof on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, a verdict was found for the said C. D.: therefore it is considered that her Majesty's hands be removed from the possession of the said — in the said inquisition mentioned, and that the same be restored to the said C. D.; [if costs taxed, proceed thus] and that the said C. D. do recover from the Crown the sum of £— for his costs of suit.

[If on demurrer, as before to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

Form of Judgment for the Defendant on Reversal of Outlawry.

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18— [the day transcript was filed.]

Middlesex [or county], to wit.—On the day and year above written was filed in the office of her Majesty's Remembrancer of this court the transcript of a certain writ of capias utlagatum issued against A. B., of —, and the inquisition taken thereunder by the sheriff of —.

[Plea of defendant.]

And on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B. appears by —, his attorney, and saith that the said outlawry is reversed, and for proof thereof brings into court the following certificate [or order; here set out the same.]

[Confession of the Attorney-General.]

And on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, Sir —, Knight, her Majesty's Attorney-General, saith, that on perusing the certificate of — [or order of —], it sufficiently appears to him that what is contained in the said plea is true; therefore he will not proceed any further in the premises for her said Majesty against the said A. B.: therefore it is considered that her Majesty's hands be removed from the said — in the said inquisition mentioned; and that he, the said A. B., be restored to the possession thereof [and if necessary], together with the rents, issues, and profits of the same which have not been answered to her said Majesty.

[At the time of filing this judgment the plea and certificate or order, and the confession of the Attorney-General, must be filed.]

Form of Judgment on Special Case.

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Date of order.]

[Title of suit or matter.]

Whereas, by an order of the Hon. Mr. —, dated the — day of —, A. D. 18—, it was ordered that [state the substance of the order]: and whereas, in pursuance of the said order, a case was stated between [the parties], which case was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, filed in the office of the Queen's Remembrancer [if error brought, enrol special case, introducing these words, "and is to the effect following"]; and afterwards, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the court was of opinion that [state the substance of the judgment]: therefore it is considered that &c. [state the judgment, as in other cases, according to the judgment of the court.]

Form of Judgment by Default against one Defendant, and another pleads to Issue, and Issue found for the Crown.

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—.

[Tests of writ.]

Middlesex, to wit.—On the day and year above written a writ of subpoena issued forth of this court against A. B. and C. D., at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty, for [here state shortly for what the writ is issued.] And whereas, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B., by E. F., his attorney, entered an appearance to the said writ, and pleaded to the information, numbered —, filed against him and the said C. D. on the — day of —, A. D. 18—: and whereas the said C. D. was on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, duly served with the aforesaid writ, but hath made default in appearing thereto, and thereupon the said information, numbered —, has been filed against him and the said A. B. in this court; and by reason of the default of the said C. D., therefore it is considered that her Majesty ought to recover against the said C. D. the several penalties in the said information mentioned; but because it is unknown to the court what penalties the said A. B. hath incurred, and because it is convenient that there be but one judgment for the penalties in the said information mentioned, therefore let the giving of the same against the said C. D. be stayed until the trial of the issue joined between her Majesty's Attorney-General and the said A. B.: and whereas, on the trial of the said issue so joined, on a verdict of the country, on the — day of —, A. D. 18—, the said A. B. was found guilty of the several offences, and each and every of them, in the said information mentioned: therefore it is considered that the said A. B. and C. D. be convicted of the several offences in the said information mentioned, and that they do for their said offences forfeit the several sums of money in the said information mentioned, amounting together to the sum of £—, and that her Majesty recover against the said A. B. and C. D. the said sum of £—, [if costs taxed, proceed thus] and also the sum of £— for her Majesty's costs of suit, which said sums in the whole amount to £—.

[The above form may be adapted, with such alterations as may be necessary, to meet the cases of duties or intrusion.]

Form of Judgment of Affirmance where Judgment given for the Crown, to be entered on original Judgment Roll.

[To the end of the judgment on the roll in the suit, and then proceed thus:]

Afterwards, on — [the day of lodging the note of error], the said defendant delivered to the Queen's Remembrancer of this court a memorandum in writing alleging that there was error in law in the record and proceedings aforesaid; and afterwards, on — [the day of making the suggestion on the roll], the said defendant said that there was error in the record and proceedings aforesaid; and the said Attorney-General, on behalf of her said Majesty, said that there was no error therein; and thereupon afterwards, on — [the day of giving judgment in Exchequer Chamber], before the justices of our lady the Queen assigned to hold pleas in the court of our lady the Queen, before the Queen herself and the justices of the Common Bench of our said lady the Queen, came the said Attorney-General, and the said defendant by his attorney aforesaid; and it appeared to the said court of error in the Exchequer Chamber that there was no error in the record and proceedings aforesaid, or in giving the judgment aforesaid: therefore it was considered by the said court of error that the judgment aforesaid be in all things affirmed and stand in full force and effect, the said causes above for error suggested [or assigned] in anywise notwithstanding; and that her Majesty do recover against the said defendant £— by the said court of error adjudged to her said Majesty for costs which her Majesty has sustained and expended by reason of the delay of execution of the judgment aforesaid, on pretence of the prosecution of the said proceedings in error, and that her Majesty have execution thereof &c.; and thereupon the record and proceedings aforesaid, with the judgment aforesaid so affirmed by the said court of error as aforesaid, and the said judgment of that court, were by the said Remembrancer duly brought back here, in order that the said court here might award such further proceedings as might be necessary upon the record aforesaid, and upon the said judgment and proceedings so affirmed as aforesaid.

Form of Judgment of Reversal where Judgment originally given for the Crown.

[As in the before-mentioned form to asterisk*, then proceed thus:]

That there was manifest error in the record and proceedings aforesaid, and in giving the judgment aforesaid: therefore it was considered by the said court of error that the judgment aforesaid, for the error aforesaid alleged, be reversed, annulled, and altogether holden for nought, and that the said defendant be restored to all things which he hath lost by occasion of the said judgment, &c.; and that her Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty, take nothing by his said writ; and that the said defendant do go thereof without day, &c.; and that the said defendant do recover against the Crown £— for his costs of defence in this behalf by the said court of error adjudged to the said defendant; and thereupon the record and proceedings aforesaid [conclude as in previous form, but instead of affirm, say reversed.]

[The above forms may be varied to meet the case of discontinuance of error, withdrawal of same, non pros., or as the case may be.]

FORM No. 9.

Satisfaction Warrant.

[To be indorsed by the solicitor of the department, and afterwards signed by the Attorney-General.]

In the Exchequer.

The — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—, [when signed by the Attorney-General.]

Between our Sovereign Lady the Queen [or her Majesty's Attorney-General, informant], and

A. B., defendant.

And Sir —, Knight, her Majesty's Attorney-General, who prosecuteth for her said Majesty, acknowledges and confesses [if by inquisition or extent] that the sum of £—, found due to her Majesty from the said A. B. [if by bond, that the sum of £—, the penalty of a certain bond given by the said A. B. to her Majesty, bearing date the — day of —, A.D. 18—; if by judgment, that a certain judgment entered against the said A. B. on the — day of —, A.D. 18—, for the sum of £—], hath been satisfied to her Majesty's use; and that therefore her said Majesty's Attorney-General will not proceed any further in the premises against the said A. B. touching the same.

[Indorsement.]

The within-mentioned sum having been satisfied, I see no objection to the filing of this warrant, with the leave of the Attorney-General.

C. D.,

Solicitor of &c.

SELWYN'S NISI PRIUS.—New Edition.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo., 1859, price 2l. 16s. cloth.

SELWYN'S ABRIDGMENT of the LAW of NISI PRIUS. Twelfth Edition, with considerable Alterations and Additions. By DAVID POWER, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel, Recorder of Ipswich.

"No book has shewn by its longevity the original strength and soundness of its constitution more than Selwyn's Nisi Prius. It is one of the standard classics of the law to be found in every professional man's library in the kingdom, and the lapse of years has but proved its value and excellency. Selwyn's Abridgment of the Law of Nisi Prius has now reached its twelfth edition; and, in consequence of the very able revision, and, we may almost say, in some parts of the work, the admirable judgment and care displayed by Mr. Power in the entire reconstruction of some of the most important chapters of the work, its value is enhanced greatly—like to the student and the practitioner in both branches of the Profession. . . . In bringing our notice of the twelfth edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius to a close, we can assure Mr. Power that he has fully succeeded in the laborious task which he has undertaken. The whole Profession will feel that it is indebted to him for a work that is in every way deserving high praise and recommendation. A new edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius has long been wanted by students, attorneys, and counsel, and at last we are happy to say the task has been accomplished, and a work produced that ought to be found on the shelves of every professional man's library in the kingdom."—County Courts Chronicle, July 1, 1859.

"We may be sure that a law book which passes through 'twelve editions' has been fully tested and generally approved of by the Profession. The work before us comes with this high recommendation, and has well earned its title to a renewal of its term on the ground of public utility. It is a good sound work, well conceived and well arranged—a favourite alike with the law student and the advocate in full business. A judicious combination of the old and modern law, of principles and practice, renders it very useful, as a book to be carefully studied, as a work of reference in chambers, and as a circuit companion. It is far more readable than the works which bear a similar title, and, indeed, may rather be termed a treatise upon actions at law than a mere Nisi Prius book. We thank the learned editor for having given to the Profession an excellent edition of this valuable work."—Jurist, June 4, 1859.

"On the whole, therefore, we believe that we can conscientiously recommend this new edition of a very celebrated work to our readers. It has throughout the appearance of having been worked up with much care; and Mr. Power's reputation is no slight guarantee that this industry has been generally successful."—Solicitors' Journal, May 21, 1859.

"Great was the reputation of Selwyn's Nisi Prius in our young days. It was the handbook of the practitioner in office or chambers, and the authority in all the courts. The law and the practice of the law have been changed. As we have him now, Selwyn is no longer an antiquity; but, resuscitated by Power, his youth is restored, so that he combines whatever of wisdom there was in him, with the knowledge of this latter era in the world's history. Seriously, Mr. Power has reproduced Selwyn."—Law Times, June 18, 1859.

After the Division of Profits at Christmas, 1859, the Life Assurances in force, with existing Bonuses thereon, amounted to upwards of 4,730,000l., the Income from the Life Branch 207,000l. per annum, and the Life Assurance Fund exceeded 1,618,000l.

LOCAL MILITIA and VOLUNTEER CORPS.—No extra premium is required for service therein.

INVALID LIVES assured at corresponding Extra Premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, if such value be not less than 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS of POLICIES.—Written Notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge for Policy Stamps.

Notice is hereby given, that FIRE POLICIES which expire at Lady-day must be renewed within fifteen days at this office; or with MR. SAMS, No. 1. St. James's-street, corner of Pall-mall; or with the Company's Agents throughout the Kingdom, otherwise they become void. Losses caused by explosion of gas are admitted by this Company.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 30, 1861.

IN a former number (ante, p. 76) we gave at length the speech of the Solicitor-General in introducing to the House of Commons a series of bills—seven in number—for the consolidation and amendment of our statute law on the following subjects—offences against the person, malicious injuries to property, larceny, forgery, coinage offences, accessories and abettors, and also to repeal certain enactments which have been consolidated in other acts. These bills have been, on the motion of the learned gentleman, referred to a select committee: consisting of the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Sir George Lewis, the Lord Advocate, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Sir Hugh Cairns, Mr. Serjeant Kinglake, and Messrs. Whiteside, G. Mure, Massey, Henley, Selwyn, Walpole, G. Hardy, Roebuck, Edwin James, Butt, Macaulay, Mellor, Bovill, Cobbett, Collier, Locke, Hadfield, M'Mahon, Ewart, Digby Seymour, Denman, and Ayrton; five to be a quorum, and with power to send for persons, papers, and records.

That our laws require, and have long required, large reform is fully conceded on all hands; but whether the proper mode of effecting this is by "codification," or "consolidation and amendment," is a much-disputed question. Whether rightly or not, the Legislature of our day has determined, at least for the present, in favour of the latter, and the above bills of the Solicitor-General are introduced in furtherance of this view. Still, it is observable that in our Indian Empire we are at this very moment proceeding on the opposite plan of codification, the Penal Code of India being now complete, and to come into operation in May next*.

It is strongly urged by some persons, that any attempt to consolidate and amend our laws with effect must necessarily prove abortive so long as the present mode of legislation is adhered to. They contend, that in order to secure anything like symmetry or harmony in such a labour it is necessary that bills be settled by a few individuals selected for the purpose, and then passed into law by the Legislature, in reliance on their ability and honesty; and, indeed, where the object is merely to consolidate into one a number of statutes scattered through the statute-book, this reasoning may possibly be well founded. But the proposal to delegate to a few individuals the power of legislating on what amendments are required in the law is a different matter, and is a proposition somewhat calculated to startle. Take, for instance, the case before us—the special committee to which the bills of the Solicitor-General are referred—and let us direct our attention to the first of them, the bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to offences against the person. In dealing with that bill the committee will have to consider, inter alia, the questions, whether for these offences the punishment of death ought to be abolished, either wholly or partially, and whether corporal punishment by the lash ought to be retained in that part of our criminal law. These surely are great questions of legislation, the solution of which rests with those whose duty it is to make our laws; and not with some twenty or thirty individuals, no matter how eminent, or how chosen. But when we observe the composition of the committee to which these bills are referred, it will be found that the members of it are all, or nearly all, of the legal profession—many of them undoubtedly in the first ranks of the English Bar. If, as we have already observed, these were mere consolidation bills, this selection would be intelligible; but they are also amendment bills, and why should the amendment of the law be entrusted exclusively to lawyers? This is, indeed, reversing Lord Bacon's maxim, that "the wisdom of the lawyer is one thing, the wisdom of the lawgiver is another."

We have now only to await the report of the select committee, and much will depend on the time when it is presented. If these bills are principally consolidation measures, they may easily pass into law this session, under any circumstances; but if they involve important amendments in the law, we sincerely trust that we shall be spared a repetition of what we have too often witnessed—the discussion of great measures of legal reform in the middle of summer, when the members of the Legislature are exhausted by the previous labours of the session, and impeded by the heat of the weather, and other obstacles to sound and well-considered legislation. Although a retardation of reform for a time, it would be far better, under such circumstances, to defer the discussion until the next session, with the understanding that no excuse be allowed to prevent a matter of such importance being then disposed of without delay.

COSTS OF ACTIONS IN THE SUPERIOR COURTS OF LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I avail myself of your kind permission to resume in your columns the subject to which my letter of last week was devoted.

We now come to the consideration of an entirely different class of enactments—namely, those which were passed for the purpose of limiting the general right to costs.

At an early period in our judicial history it was discovered that the indiscriminate award of costs to the successful party tended to encourage the bringing of actions on frivolous, though technically rightful, grounds, and also favoured the vexatious choice of the higher and more costly, in preference to the inferior, tribunals. To check this evil the 43 Eliz. c. 6, was passed, which declared, that "if upon any action personal to be brought in any of her Majesty's courts at Westminster, not being for any title or interest of lands, nor concerning the freehold or inheritance of any lands, nor for any battery, it shall appear to the judges of the same court, and so signified or set down by the justices before whom the same shall be tried, that the debt or damages to be recovered therein, in the same court, shall not amount to the sum of 40s. or above, that in every such case the judges and justices before whom any such actions shall be pursued shall not award for costs to the party plaintiff any greater or more costs than the sum of the debt or damages so recovered shall amount unto, but less, at their discretion."

To explain this enactment it should be remarked, that the county or sheriff's court of that time had exclusive* cognisance of all† personal actions (not being for trespass vi et armis, or for land of freehold, &c.) under the value of 40s.; and therefore it became a common device, for the purpose of taking the case out of the inferior jurisdiction, to lay the damages in the declaration at an amount above that sum. The framers of the statute struck at the root of this mischief by making the certificate of the judge, to the effect that the extra claim was not bona fide, the instrument for taking away the right to costs; in effect, they said to the plaintiff, "If you will harass your opponent by coming to the courts at Westminster, when you ought to bring your suit in the county court, you shall forfeit the right to full costs, which success would otherwise give you."

In the following reign it was thought necessary to do something still more stringent towards repressing frivolous actions for verbal defamation; and accordingly the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 6, enacted, that in all actions for slanderous words, wherever tried, if the jury assess the damages under 40s., then the plaintiff should recover only so much costs as the damages so assessed amount to, any law, &c. to the contrary notwithstanding.

So things remained in this respect until the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, was passed, which, by the construction* of the judges, was limited in its application to actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, together with the personal actions excluded from the operation of the 43 Eliz. c. 6—namely, actions of assault and battery, and those in which title to land came in question. In its treatment of these it differed materially from the example of its great predecessor; for it laid down that if the jury gave less than 40s. damages, the plaintiff should not recover more costs than the damages so found should amount to, unless the judge certified that an assault and battery was proved, or that title to land was chiefly in question. This section of the statute is not now in force, having been expressly repealed by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24; but it is necessary to refer to it because of its supposed connexion with the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, of which act sect. 4 says, that "in all actions of trespass in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, wherein, at the trial of the cause, it shall appear, and be certified by the judge under his hand upon the back of the record, that the trespass upon which any defendant shall be found guilty was wilful and malicious, the plaintiff shall recover, not only his damages, but his full costs of suit, any former law to the contrary notwithstanding." It has been held, in Bouyer v. Cook (4 C. B. 236), that this merely operated to mitigate the stringency of the 136th section of the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, and therefore that the repeal of the latter annihilates both. Obviously the words of the section have no meaning if there was nothing antecedent to them which operated to take away costs in cases where a certificate of wilful and malicious trespass might possibly be given. But were the Court of Common Pleas strictly right in saying that the 136th section of the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, was the only enactment which had this operation? A verdict for less than 40s. in an action for trespass quare clausum fregit, where title to land was not in question, followed by the judge's certificate, pursuant to the 43 Eliz. c. 6, would have the same depriving effect. Of course, if the giving of this certificate is entirely discretionary with the judge, as is probably the case, the above decision is practically correct; but still this very indirect mode of repealing an express statute is extremely unsatisfactory.

The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, is the only act relating to our present topic which remains to be considered. It repealed, in express terms, the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, s. 136, and impliedly, we must assume, the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 4; it also took actions of trespass and trespass on the case out of the operation of the 43 Eliz. c. 6. Having done this, the 2nd section enacted, that in actions of trespass and trespass on the case, where the plaintiff recovered less damages than 40s., he should have no costs whatever unless the judge or officer who presided at the trial should certify that the action was really brought to try a right, besides the mere right to recover damages for the grievance complained of in the action, or that the trespass or grievance in respect of which the action was brought was wilful and malicious. And the 3rd section provided that nothing in the act should deprive the plaintiff of his costs in an action for trespass committed by the defendant after notice not to trespass.

* 6 Edw. 4, c. 8; Kennard v. Jones (4 T. R. 485).

† See authorities in Com. Dig., "County," C. 8.

Wilde, C. J., in Bouyer v. Cook, concisely summed up the effect of this most difficult statute, by saying that "a plaintiff who recovers less damages than 40s., in an action of trespass or trespass on the case, is entitled to no costs unless the judge shall certify that the action was brought to try a right, or that the trespass or grievance in respect of which the action is brought was wilful and malicious, except where the defendant has had a previous notice not to trespass."

Where there has been this notice—which must be made to appear on the record by suggestion, if necessary, in which case it may be remarked that the costs of an issue on the suggestion would not fall within any existing enactment (see Norwood v. Pitt, 6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 614)—as the act then does not apply, and no other act operating upon actions of trespass remains, the plaintiff is remitted to his full right under the Statute of Gloucester.

Again: where a certificate has been given under the 2nd section, the act is also rendered inoperative (Evans v. Rees, 30 L. J., C. P., 16), and the plaintiff either falls under the scarcely more merciful restraint of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 6, which only gives as much costs as damages, or obtains his full costs.

In all other personal actions, excepting trespass and trespass on the case, where the verdict is for less than 40s. damages, the 43 Eliz. c. 6, still governs the right to costs.

So much for the present state of the legislation upon costs, as defined by the time-honoured quantum of 40s. damages. It certainly is not so explicit as to render an attempt at simplification undesirable, even if there should be reason for continuing the existence of a limiting point, which has long ceased to have any practical significance.

Let us pass on to the next set of limiting statutes, namely, the county court and cognate acts.

The modern county courts were established in 1846, by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and the 58th section of this act limited their jurisdiction, in respect of the amount in litigation, to cases where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20l. Over some of the cases within the class defined by sect. 58, characterised by certain circumstances of locality mentioned in sect. 128, the county courts were given a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the superior courts, while over the remainder the county courts obtained exclusive jurisdiction (to use a somewhat incorrect but convenient adjective). Then, following the example set by the 43 Eliz. c. 6, though not imitating its simplicity, the 129th section proceeded to exclude from the superior courts, on pain of losing costs, not all cases within the new county court jurisdiction, nor even all within its exclusive jurisdiction, but all contracts within the latter, together with so many torts within it as are defined by the circumstance that the damages do not amount to more than 5l.!

Why the Legislature should have thus attempted to separate actions for contract and tort it is very difficult to conceive; the more so as they did nothing of the kind when fixing the superior limit of the county court jurisdiction. The learned judges of the Court of Queen's Bench lately, in Tatton v. The Great Western Railway Company (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 800), expressed very strong opinions against the reality of this distinction; and that case illustrated in a remarkable manner the practical difficulty of observing it.

The latter part of the 129th section gave costs as between attorney and client to the defendant in certain cases where the plaintiff did not obtain a verdict, unless the judge certified to the contrary.

This statute expressly left untouched the question of costs in cases belonging to the concurrent jurisdiction, and impliedly in the case of judgment by default; it also provided, by judge's certificate, for a mitigation of the penalty in the other cases. However, as there was much practical inconvenience lying in the way of parties who wanted to avail themselves of these advantages, the provisions of this act upon this point were superseded by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61.

The 1st section of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, increased the higher range of the county court jurisdiction to 50l., but it made no alteration in the 20l. and 5l., as determining the right to costs in the superior courts; so that cases triable in the county courts may now be separated into three classes:—

First, those whose circumstances of locality place them in the concurrent jurisdiction.

Secondly, those not so distinguished, and where the amount recovered does not exceed 20l. and 5l. in contract and tort respectively.

Thirdly, those not so distinguished, and where the amount recovered lies between 20l. and 50l. in contract, and 5l. and 50l. in tort, inclusive of the latter limit in both cases.

There is no check whatever provided by this act against bringing class 3 into the superior courts. If class 2, or any resembling them, are brought there, no costs will be awarded, unless the judge shall certify on the back of the record that it appeared to him at the trial that the cause of action was one for which a plaintiff could not have been entered in a county court, or that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the superior court, or unless an order of court or of a judge in chambers be obtained, under the provision of sect. 13. And, finally, those of class 1, if brought in superior courts, and if only 20l. or 5l. be recovered, will also be awarded costs by an order under sect. 13, but not by certificate. It must be added, that this act expressly exempted judgment by default from deprivation of costs.

Whether the words "judgment by default," here used, are confined to actions of contract, or whether they extend to cases of tort, followed by an assessment of damages on a writ of inquiry, is not clear. However, as to judgments by default in actions of contract, this doubt is now of no importance, for if the amount of damages claimed, and therefore recovered, does not exceed 20l., the plaintiff is, by sect. 30 of stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, deprived of costs, unless the court in which the action is brought, or a judge, otherwise directs; and it has been held (Heard v. Edey, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 71) that the effect of this is to remove default in an action on contract from the above exemption.

Previously to this change, sect. 13 of stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, which provided, in certain cases, a release by order of the court or judge from deprivation of costs, was repealed; and sect. 4 of stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, substituted for it.

Thus we have still in force four County Court Acts regulating costs in the superior courts—one, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 129, giving costs as between attorney and client to a successful defendant; another, the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, ss. 11, 12, depriving a plaintiff of costs who obtains a verdict not exceeding 20l. or 5l. respectively, unless the judge gives a certain certificate; a third, the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 30, places judgments by default in the same position as the verdicts just mentioned; and the fourth, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 4, enabling the plaintiff, in any of these cases, to get his costs restored to him under certain circumstances, by obtaining an order from a court or judge to that effect.

Analogous to the County Court Acts is the 15 Vict. c. lxxvii, which re-organised the sheriff's court in the city of London, and made it, in fact, the county court for a metropolitan district. Sects. 120, 121, and 122, in effect, repeated the foregoing enactments of the County Court Acts relative to deprivation and restoration of costs in actions in the superior courts, merely placing the sheriff's court jurisdiction for that of the county court among the facts to be certified by the court or judge, and making the disqualifying verdict "less than," instead of "not exceeding," 20*l.* and 5*l.* respectively. But the 119th section, which appears to have found its way into the act in a most unaccountable manner, introduced an additional restraint upon a plaintiff's right to costs. The only meaning that can be given to it (and even this construction, it may be remarked, renders part of its words superfluous) is, that if a plaintiff in superior courts, in any action on contract, which might, with some exceptions, be brought in the city court (whose jurisdiction extends to 50*l.*, and is very comprehensive in locality), recover 20*l.*, and not more than 50*l.*, he will be deprived of costs by the defendant entering a suggestion on the record, unless he obtains the certificate or order prescribed for the relief of the other cases.

Nor are these all the acts which profess to deal with limited verdicts, for the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 34, enacts, that in any action for tort in the superior courts, where *less than 5*l. is recovered, the plaintiff shall have no costs if the judge certifies that the action was not brought to try a right, and that the trespass was not wilful, and malicious, and was not fit to be brought. It is remarkable that this section does not place a verdict of *exactly 5*l. under the depriving power of the judge, but leaves it to the chance of escaping the forfeiting section of the County Court Act.

The confusion into which matters are thrown by these concurrent acts of Parliament will be readily perceived from the following diagram:—

Cases of Actions in Superior Courts where Costs are limited by Sum recovered.

Class of Cases.	Defined by.	Verdict.
A. ....	City Small Debts Act.....	20 l. and not exceeding 50 l.	No costs, if followed by suggestion, unless there be certificate or order.
B. ....	County Court Act .....	Not more than 20 l. ....	No costs, unless by certificate or order.
C. ....	City Small Debts Act.....	Less than 20 l. .....	No costs, unless by certificate or order.
D. ....	County Court Act .....	Not more than 5 l. .....	No costs, unless by certificate or order.
E. ....	City Small Debts Act.....	Less than 5 l. .....	No costs, unless by certificate or order.
F. { embracing	Common-law Procedure Act,
both D. & E.	1860. ....	Less than 5 l. .....	No costs, if judge certifies.
G. ....	Lord Denman's Act, sect. 3.	Less than 40 s. .....	Full costs, if followed by suggestion of notice.
H. ....	Lord Denman's Act .....	Less than 40 s. .....	No costs, unless judge certifies.
I. ....	Ditto, together with Slander Act .....	Less than 40 s. .....	No costs, unless judge certifies, and then no more than damages.
K. ....	Act of Elizabeth .....	Less than 40 s. .....	No costs, if judge certifies.

Of course the Classes A., B., &c. are not all exclusive of each other, nor is the sum mentioned as the limit always to be recovered by verdict.

Besides the general legislation upon the subject of costs in the superior courts, which I have attempted to describe, there are many other acts directed to the costs of action in special cases, such as actions on judgments, actions for infringement of patents, actions against persons for what they have done pursuant to a statute, actions for debt, of which affidavit has been filed under the Bankruptcy Act, &c.

It is not necessary for me to mention these in detail. My purpose has been attained if I have succeeded in presenting to the readers of THE JURIST a tolerably comprehensive view of the very numerous and sometimes discordant enactments which bear upon this subject.

How unnecessary is all this complexity appears when it is remembered that the result aimed at is, after all, very simple indeed; it is nothing more than this:—

1. To give the plaintiff or the defendant, or some of the individual defendants, should the action be brought against more persons than one, according as they respectively succeed in the contest between them, the right to obtain the costs of suit from his antagonist.

2. To distribute between the plaintiff and the defendant the costs of the issues, where several are raised by the pleadings to one cause of action, and neither party has succeeded upon them all.

3. To check vexatious litigation, by prescribing some test for the purpose of sifting out of the superior courts all actions which either ought not to be brought at all, or might with complete justice have been decided in an inferior court.

If this result can be effected by the operation of one statute, instead of through the agency of innumerable partial enactments, scattered among the statutes at large, extending from the reign of Queen Elizabeth to that of Queen Victoria, it is certainly quite time that the change should be made. Mr. Seymour's bill is directed to the three points just mentioned, and according to the degree of success with which it reaches them ought to be the measure of approbation accorded to his efforts.

Temple.

I am, yours &c.,

J. B. PHEAR.

RULES OF PRACTICE ON THE REVENUE SIDE OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

(Concluded from p. 126).

FORM No. 10.

Form of Recognisance of Bail on Capias.

In the Exchequer.

Be it remembered, that A. B., of —, C. D., of —, and E. F., of —, come in their proper persons before the Hon. Sir —, Knight, one of the barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster [or before G. H., a commissioner duly authorised for taking special bail in her Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster], on the — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—, and jointly and severally acknowledge themselves to be indebted to her present Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs or successors, in the sum of — pounds.

Upon condition that if the said A. B. shall satisfy her said Majesty all the penalties [or, if for duties, the several sums of money] sued for upon an information [if information not filed, say to be] exhibited against him before the barons of this Exchequer by her said Majesty's Attorney-General for the forfeitures and offences [or, if for duties, recovery of the several sums of money] in the said information mentioned; or otherwise, if the said A. B. shall render himself a prisoner in the court here, then this recognisance of bail to be void, or else to be and remain in full force and virtue.

Form of Recognisance of Bail in Error.

In the Exchequer.

Be it remembered, that A. B., of —, C. D., of —, and E. F., of —, come in their proper persons before the Hon. Sir —, Knight, one of the barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster [or before G. H., a commissioner duly authorised for taking special bail in her Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster], on the — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—, and jointly and severally acknowledge themselves to be indebted to her present Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs or successors, in the sum of — pounds.

£—.

Whereas the above-named A. B. hath delivered a memorandum in writing to the Queen's Remembrancer of this court, alleging that there is error in law in the record and proceedings upon the information exhibited against him therein by her Majesty's Attorney-General. The condition, therefore, of this recognisance is such, that if the said A. B. shall prosecute the proceedings in error with effect, and shall also satisfy and pay, if the said judgment of the said court upon the said information shall be affirmed, or the proceedings in error discontinued by the said A. B., all and singular the sum or sums of money adjudged, or to be adjudged, upon the said judgment, and all costs and damages to be also awarded for the delaying of execution thereon, then this recognisance to be void, or else to be and remain in full force and virtue.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 6, 1861.

IN our last number (ante, p. 131) we referred to the bills introduced into the House of Commons by the Solicitor-General for consolidating and amending a considerable part of our criminal law; and incidentally adverted to the circumstance that the alterations proposed to be made by some of them will have the effect of bringing before the Legislature the important questions, whether the punishments of death and of the lash ought or ought not to be retained in our jurisprudence.

The first of these has long occupied the public attention. The punishment of death has not only been advocated and attacked on grounds of propriety and expediency, but also on theological grounds. According to one party this punishment has been established jure divino for murder, and perhaps for some other offences; while others contend that if there be a jus divinum in the matter, it is the other way, and that this mode of punishment is prohibited by the Christian religion. We have no desire to discuss the question at present, for it appears to us that, in the existing state of things, it cannot be fairly raised. It must be conceded by all, except those who are thoroughly fanatical on the side of total abolition, that the punishment of death for great crimes cannot be taken away, unless some very severe and effective secondary punishment is substituted in its room; and we fearlessly assert, that at the present moment no such secondary punishment exists among us. The only things that could be substituted for capital punishment are solitary confinement, transportation, and penal servitude, either for life or some very protracted period. The first of these has been long rejected, perhaps unwisely, by the Legislature. The second has been almost entirely abolished, and a committee of the House of Commons is now sitting on the question; but should transportation be restored, it would be a most weak and miserable substitute, unless the punishment is carried out in a very different manner from what it was formerly. We must, therefore, direct our attention to penal servitude, which, indeed, is the substitute usually advocated by those who argue for the abolition of the death penalty.

Now, our readers are doubtless aware that a large number of convicts condemned to penal servitude are collected together at Chatham, and employed on the public works there; and that several very determined mutinies have recently taken place among them, which were suppressed with some difficulty, and not without the employment of a large military force. It has, indeed, been suggested, that for these mutinies the keepers of those persons may be in some degree responsible; but be this as it may, the disclosures that have been recently made give us a glimpse of convict life, which shews it scandalously insufficient as a punishment for serious crimes, and, as applied to murder, perfectly absurd.

Not only has the dietary of these convicts been published, which is wholly inconsistent with that of persons undergoing severe punishment, but we find in a contemporary paper the following description of the system followed:—

"The plan of prisoners' gratuities; to which attention is just now being directed, is as follows:—Each convict's period of servitude is divided into certain stages—those convicted under the Penal Servitude Act of 1853 into four, and those under the act of 1857 into three. Under the act of 1853 each convict is awarded during the second stage 6*d.* per week, during the third 9*d.*, and during the fourth 1*s.* By the Penal Servitude Act of 1857 each convict is granted a remission of sentence proportionate to his time, and consequently they receive the smaller gratuities of 4*d.* and 8*d.* per week respectively during the second and third stages of their imprisonment. They also receive, on account of good conduct, 6*d.* for the first class, and 4*d.* for the second class, but nothing for the third class, to which any convict can be degraded for six months for misconduct, this punishment carrying with it, too, the loss of all other gratuities. In addition to allowances each convict receives 9*d.* per week for very good conduct, and 6*d.* for good conduct during the time they are employed on the public works. It will be seen that each convict may be in receipt of a rather considerable sum of money at the expiration of his sentence, many of them being handed as much as 20*l.* on their leaving the prison. During the year 1860, 676 convicts were discharged from the Chatham establishment on the completion of their sentences, and the gratuities awarded them amounted to 7281*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*, being an average of 10*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* per man, besides an entire new suit of clothes, with change of flannels, linen, and stockings, and their travelling expenses paid to their destinations. From the above figures it will readily be seen what extraordinary advantages are held out to the convicts to conduct themselves with propriety during their period of penal servitude; but notwithstanding this, the participators in the recent outbreak chose to risk the forfeiture of the whole."

The policy of frequently remitting a portion of the sentences of convicts is questionable enough, even when done by the authorities in the exercise of a discretion reserved for peculiar and exceptional cases. But among us at present the application of the prerogative of mercy is systematised by a code of laws enacted for convicts. The consequence is, that every convict learns, on entering upon his punishment, not only the precise amount of remission to which he will be entitled after a defined period of virtuous or hypocritical conduct, but the fact that on certain specified conditions he may obtain even rewards and gratuities from his gaolers. Can that be a sound principle of legislation which, while professedly leaving to the tribunal by which he is condemned to apportion the quantum of punishment of each offender, creates an imperium in imperio, whereby that punishment is afterwards systematically altered by other persons? Take an instance. The judge who has heard the charge against a criminal, and the evidence on which he was convicted by the jury, considers ten years' penal servitude the proper punishment for his offence, and passes sentence accordingly; and the sentence is so understood by the bystanders and the public. Not so by the condemned man—at least, if he belongs to a criminal class. He knows better—he is perfectly aware that he is not about to undergo anything like the punishment prescribed by the sentence—that a large portion of it will be remitted by persons who have not heard the particulars of his crime; that for further indulgence he has only to trust to his own powers of hypocrisy, and may even leave the prison where he is confined with valuable knowledge acquired in it, and a sum of money in his pocket.

Mr. Edward Webster, in a paper recently read before the Law Amendment Society advocating the total abolition of the punishment of death, suggests, as a substitute, perpetual imprisonment of the criminal for life, with solitary confinement at stated intervals, and occasional association with criminals of the same class with himself; the being compelled to learn some art, if not previously acquainted with one, in order to earn money to pay for his maintenance; and that the sentence should be irreversible except by act of Parliament. Whether this remedy would prove a cure or an aggravation of the disease we do not undertake to say, and merely refer to it to shew that one of the most determined advocates of the abolition of capital punishment (for the learned gentleman has put forward the same views in other places), has found himself compelled to admit the danger of making the change, in the present state of our secondary punishments. Another total abolitionist, the late Mr. Charles Phillips, proposed as the substitute solitary confinement for life, with dissection after death.

Now, whatever may be said respecting the punishment of death, it is at least free from absurdities and mischiefs, such as those above described. Once inflicted, there is no ticket-of-leave system to impede the course of justice, and turn dangerous and hypocritical criminals loose upon society. It has also a prescription in its favour nearly as old as the human race, so that the onus clearly lies on those who urge its abolition to bring the most irrefragable proofs of the soundness of their views. The general question, should the death penalty be abolished or not, is a perfectly fair one to be entertained by the Legislature; but the experiment of its abolition, in the present ineffective, absurd, and fantastic state of our secondary punishments, is, indeed, a risk fearful to contemplate.

With respect to the punishment of the lash, we beg to refer our readers to the returns from the various gaols on this subject given in a former volume (6 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 294); which disclose the enormous difference in this mode of punishment as administered in different gaols—the discrepancies in the number of lashes, and in the instruments of correction; for, the law having made no provision on these subjects, in some gaols the cat is used, in others merely a birch rod. The obvious remedy is to define, or at least fix with something like precision, the number of lashes that may be administered for each offence, and, if possible, to determine the instrument of correction; but, at all events, either legalise or prohibit the use of the cat. The infliction of such a punishment, at the discretion or caprice of gaolers and officials (except, perhaps, for resistance to prison discipline), is an abuse utterly insufferable.

We cannot conclude without repeating the hope expressed in our last number, that whatever views on these subjects may be adopted by the Legislature, there will be no hasty legislation upon them, or any of the other important ones involved in the bills of the Solicitor-General. Delay of reform for a year, though an evil in itself, would be a very small one in comparison.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Having occasion lately to consider the propriety of making use of the provisions of the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, in framing a will of real and personal property of small value, where the testator desired that all his property should be at once converted, it occurred to me to doubt whether the words of the 1st section of the act were such as to extend the act to the case of a trust for sale and conversion, as distinguishable from a power of sale. The wording of the act seems to presuppose a settlement of the property in specie, with a superadded power of sale; for instance, the instrument must be a "will, deed, or other instrument of settlement." Then we have the term "power of sale," and then the power is to be one "over any hereditaments named or referred to in, or from time to time subject to the uses or trusts of, such will, deed, or other instrument of settlement."

Can you, Sir, or any of your readers, resolve this doubt, and assure a testator, who relies upon the provisions of the act in such a case, that the Legislature intended the act to apply to an immediate trust for sale and conversion, and has expressed such intention in language clear beyond the possibility of question?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

X. Y. Z.

[It would certainly be a curious result of legislative wisdom if the trustees of a conveyance in trust for sale for the benefit of creditors took, under Lord Cranworth's Act, a power of exchange; and we do not pretend to anticipate the decision of the Court on the question; but the moral of this and fifty other doubts on the act is, that it is a snare and a nuisance, and that every will and every deed creating a trust of real estate, and every mortgage of real estate, ought to contain a declaration excluding its operation. We have lately seen a mortgage of an interest in stock and policies of insurance from which the ordinary powers to sell have been omitted, on the supposition that they would be supplied by this act.]

AUDIENCE OF SOLICITORS IN THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

WE have received a circular from Mr. W. Ford (of the firm of Rogerson & Ford) complaining that the Attorney-General's proposed repeal of the provision in the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849 (sect. 247), under which solicitors have the privilege of being heard as advocates in the Court of Bankruptcy, will have the effect of excluding solicitors from audience in many cases now open to them, although the Attorney-General has distinctly stated that he had no intention of depriving solicitors of any privileges which they at present enjoy in courts of bankruptcy.

Reviews.

A Handy Book for the Common-law Judges' Chambers.
By GEO. H. PARKINSON, Chamber Clerk to the Hon. Mr. Justice Byles. [Butterworths, 1861.]

IN his Preface, Mr. Parkinson explains that the design of his work is to give to those not in possession of the large and expensive works upon the general practice of the courts, &c. plain and simple instructions respecting the documents upon which the more important chamber applications are grounded, and the method observed in obtaining the required order or fiat of the judge. Hence it will be seen that he does not profess to deal with all the applications made to judges at chambers; for instance, he has wholly omitted the subject of the amendment of legal proceedings, and of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. His work, therefore, must not be looked upon as a systematic treatise on the practice at chambers, but simply as, what it professes to be, "a Handy Book" on the subject. For this task Mr. Parkinson is eminently qualified; filling, as he does, the position of chamber clerk to Mr. Justice Byles, and, we believe, having been for many years clerk to Lord Wensleydale when Baron Parke.

The contents of the book are as follows:—After a table of the fees taken at judges' chambers, and an introduction explanatory of chamber jurisdiction in general, with the attendance at chambers of the judges and their clerks, the body of the work is divided into three heads:—

1. Ex parte applications without affidavit.
2. Ex parte applications upon affidavit.
3. Applications upon summons, with or without affidavit.

Then follows an Appendix, consisting of sixty of the principal forms of proceedings used at chambers.

We give the following as illustrative of the practical character of this work:—"It is by no means unusual for a summons to be taken out in blank, the general nature of the proposed filling up being previously made known to the clerk issuing the same, in whose discretion it remains to fill up the summons himself (which, however, he is bound to do if the applicant desires it), to issue the same in blank, or to decline to issue the document at all. The idea is very common, but altogether erroneous, that a summons can be taken out for any purpose whatever; the true test of its propriety is, whether an order can, in the event of an affidavit of service and non-attendance being presented, be drawn up upon it. If it cannot, the summons ought not to issue; although it does not necessarily follow, that upon every summons not attended by the opposite party an order will be drawn up without an affidavit of merits." (Pp. 119, 120).

Again: "With reference to consents granted by the parties themselves or their attorneys, there are certain cases in which the bare consent of the opposite party to an order being drawn up is sufficient for the issuing of such order; there are others in which an affidavit verifying the consent is required; while in a third class of cases, in addition to such consent and affidavit, the judge's fiat is deemed necessary before the order is issued.

"It is almost impossible to place under one or other of these three heads all the applications coming to the judge's chambers; and where a consent has been given, and there is a doubt whether or not anything further is necessary in order to obtain an order, it is best to apply for information to a judge's chamber clerk." (Pp. 124, 125).

There is a passage in this book which must not pass without observation. In p. 5 Mr. Parkinson says, "It must also be observed that, sitting at chambers, the judge uses an equitable authority in deciding the matters brought before him, and allows himself a latitude in departing at times from rule and precedent, which, although almost unknown in the common-law courts, is of the greatest advantage in facilitating the determination of the real matters in dispute between the parties." If, by this, Mr. Parkinson means that there are various matters in which the Legislature has invested the courts and judges at chambers with large discretionary powers, in consequence of which numerous old rules and precedents must now necessarily be disregarded—well; but if his meaning is, that judges are in the habit of disregarding at chambers rules and precedents by which they would feel themselves bound when sitting in court, we will not contradict him, for Mr. Parkinson's experience in the practice at chambers immeasurably exceeds ours; but will merely express our conviction that such a practice is an unwarrantable usurpation of jurisdiction, and our hope that it will not long escape the notice of the Legislature.

A Handy Book for Executors and Administrators. By THOMAS SIRRELL PRITCHARD, M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. [Amer, 1861.]

THIS is another Handy Book, the nature and design of which are thus explicitly stated in the Preface:—

"Almost all persons are, at some period of their lives, called upon to undertake the office of an executor or administrator. The object of this Handy Book is accordingly to give, in a convenient and cheap form, a general view of the legal position of one who has entered upon the duties of that office. . . . The principle which has guided the author in selecting the various points of information has been to point out the broad and direct road which an executor or administrator may safely pursue, contenting himself with a warning against the quagmires and unsafe places, rather than investigating them. Where such places are approached the reader is always advised to go to his solicitor or attorney, and henceforth trust for guidance to him. . . . The chapters on the Probate, Legacy, and Succession Duty Acts will, it is hoped, be of good service both to professional and non-professional readers; but it has been thought inconsistent with a work of the present character to give any 'Forms.'"

We regret the absence of a table of contents, although this defect is in some degree compensated by a tolerably good index.

THE LAW LIST.—The Law List for 1861 has just been published by Messrs. V. & R. Stevens & Sons. It is compiled by William Wilks Dalbiac, of the Inland Revenue Office, Somerset House, Registrar of Certificates, and published by the authority of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The Law List for this year, being the first that has appeared since the important provisions of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 22, contains the dates of the admissions of attorneys, as well as the other usual matters.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A meeting of this society took place on Monday, the 25th March; F. Macqueen, Esq., Q. C., in the chair; when a paper was read by Dr. Waddilove on the present state of the law of divorce.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed George Kirby, Gent., of Bicester, Oxfordshire, to be a Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery in England.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Trinity Educational Term, by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Reader will pursue the History of our Constitution from the Accession of Elizabeth to the Accession of George III. He will trace the progress and varieties of judicial opinion, as it affected the interpretation of Law—the Law of Real Property, the Law of Evidence, the Law of Libel, the Criminal Law, and the Doctrines of Equity; and he will point out the changes and growth of the Statute Law during the same period.

In his Private Classes he will continue to explain the History of our Constitution, and to point out its gradual progress during the Reigns of the Tudors and Stuarts.

The books to which he will refer are—Blackstone's Commentaries, by Kerr—Reeves's History of the English Law—Millar's History—Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy, vol. 3—Plowden's Reports—Hallam's Constitutional History—Rapin's History of the Period—Appendices to Hume's History—State Trials of the Period—Butler's Notes to Coke Littleton—Statute Book of the Period—Fortescue (Amos)—Parliamentary History—Hayes's History of Conveyancing—Clarendon's Life and History—May's History—Starkie's Law of Libel—Greenleaf on Evidence—Ralph's History and Memoirs—Coke's Institutes—Foster's Crown Law—Camden's Annals—Brodie's History—Memoirs of Strype, Ludlow, Hutchinson, Whitelocke, and Burnet—Bacon's Tracts.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Ten Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in Matters of Account.
2. On Equitable Set-off and the Appropriation of Payments.
3. The Law of Partnership, as modified by Courts of Equity.
4. On the Relief afforded in Cases of Mistake and Accident.
5. On Relief against Fraud.

The Reader will continue with his Senior and Junior Classes the general Courses of Equity already commenced. He will also continue in both Classes to explain the leading Rules of Pleading in Equity, from the work of Lord Redesdale.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, a series of Ten Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Law of Domicil.
2. Fixtures.
3. Life Assurance.
4. Conditions of Sale.

In his Private Classes the Reader on the Law of Real Property will refer more particularly to the Cases cited in the Public Lectures. He will also continue his course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a text-book.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes, in the course of the ensuing Educational Term, to deliver Ten Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Rights of Married Women over Property under Roman Jurisprudence, and Systems of Law derived from it.
2. Ownership and Prescription under Roman Law.
3. The Roman Theory of Obligation, and the Roman Law of Contract and Delict.

The Reader will endeavour, during the term, to go through a complete course of the Modern Civil Law with his Private Class, noting particularly its influence on the French Civil Code, and on other Systems of Modern Continental Law. He will use as the text-book the Systema Juris Romani Hodiè Usitati of Mackeldey. On certain days the Reader proposes to take the Titles of the Digest, De Verborum Significatione and De Regulis Juris.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Ten Public Lectures, as under:—

Prior to the Recess the Reader will lecture on the Law of Torts, contrasting Tort with Contract; inquiring as to—

1. The Nature of a Right of Action ex Delicto.
2. Duties, the Breach of which may be Actionable.
3. Actions appropriate to Specific Injuries.
4. The Grounds of Defence available in such Actions.

After the Recess the Reader proposes to lecture upon Criminal Law, including—

1. The various Modes of Criminal and Quasi-Criminal Procedure.
2. Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.
3. Offences of Ordinary Occurrence, whether triable at the Assizes or at Sessions.
4. The Remedy by Habeas Corpus, in connexion with which some important recent Cases will be reviewed.

With his Private Class the Reader will, so far as time may allow, pursue in detail the course of instruction above generally indicated, using as text-books Broom's Commentaries (2nd edition), Blackstone's or Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England, Archbold's Criminal Pleading (by Welsby), and Paley on Convictions.

BY AUTHORITY.

THE CONSOLIDATED GENERAL ORDERS of the HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY; with Regulations as to certain Fees and Charges.

"The new arrangement of the Orders leaves nothing to be wished for: it is clear, convenient, and admirably adapted for the purposes of practice. Although the language of the old Orders has been adhered to as far as possible, it has been altered whenever it was found necessary for the purpose of adapting them to the present practice, and also for the purpose of removing those doubts and difficulties which so frequently arose under the old Orders."—Jurist, Jan. 21, 1860.

V. & R. Stevens & Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

BARRY'S STATUTORY JURISDICTION IN CHANCERY, 1861.

Just published,
A TREATISE on the STATUTORY JURISDICTION of the COURT of CHANCERY. With Forms. By WILLIAM WHITTAKER BARRY, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 1861. Price 15s. cloth.
"The utility of such a work, if well done, is manifest. The law is presented in a shape fitted to be read and remembered, and the student will find it especially valuable. We regret that the many claims upon our space forbid indulgence in extract, but the reader will perhaps accept our assurance that the work has been very well done; the law is conveniently arranged for reference, and stated with singular clearness and precision."—Law Times, Feb. 23, 1861.
"A book like the present was really a desideratum. At all events, nowhere else can be found so clear and intelligible an account, in a substantial form, of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, Sir George Turner's Act, the Trustee Relief Acts, the Infants' Settlement and Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts, and other statutes under which the Court exercises its special jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal, Feb. 9, 1861.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 13, 1861.

COURTS of equity, by what a learned judge has termed a violation of the laws of property between husband and wife (4 My. & C. 405), having long since established the rule that a married woman may have separate estate, it thereupon became necessary for courts of equity also to determine in what manner the separate estate, which is the mere creature of equity, can, independently of law, be affected by the acts or engagements of married women entitled to it.

It has been clearly settled, by a long series of decisions, that a married woman, acting with respect to her separate property, is competent to act in all respects as a feme sole. With regard to personal estate settled to her separate use, even although no express power of disposition may be given to her, she may dispose of it either by act inter vivos or by will; and with regard to real estate settled to her separate use, although a feme covert can only dispose of the fee by deed acknowledged so as to bind her heir, she can deal with her life interest in the same manner as if she were a feme sole.

Moreover, the cases have decided, that not only where a married woman has acted with respect to her separate property, but even where she has entered into general engagements in writing, which do not refer to or make mention of it, such separate estate may be rendered liable to them by means of the intervention of a court of equity. If, for instance, a married woman gives a bond, even though in conjunction with her husband, or a bill of exchange or promissory note, or enter into an agreement for the payment of sums of money, her separate estate will be liable in equity to such engagements. The principle upon which these cases formerly appear to have proceeded was this, that, as such acts would have been merely nugatory if done by a feme covert, without any reference to her separate estate, she must be intended to have designed a charge on that estate, since in no other way could such instruments as we have mentioned have any validity or operation. Doubts, however, have arisen, and do not even yet appear to have quite subsided, whether a married woman having separate estate renders it liable where she becomes indebted without executing any written instrument at all.

This subject has been a good deal discussed in the recent case of Johnson v. Gallagher (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 273). There it appears that under a deed of separation executed between a husband of the first part, his wife of the second part, and a trustee of the third part, the husband assigned certain property to the trustee for the separate use of the wife, and the trustee entered into a covenant to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts. After the date of such deed, the wife, while living apart from her husband, incurred debts for furniture supplied to her. The husband died in October, 1888, and a suit was then instituted; on behalf of the wife's creditors, to enforce their claim against what had been during the coverture her separate estate. After the institution of the suit, the widow, in exercise of a power contained in the deed of separation, executed a bill of sale, comprising the whole of what had been her separate estate, to the secretary of a loan society, for the purpose of securing a sum of money due for advances made to her by the society; and the bill was amended, making the secretary a party, and praying for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to priority over the loan society. The Lords Justices, although differing from each other very materially upon the law applicable to the case, agreed nevertheless in reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and dismissed the bill, without costs. As some very important topics upon the law relating to separate estates were discussed by the learned judges, it is proposed now to notice them seriatim. There were two points in the case: first, how far a married woman renders her separate estate liable for goods sold and delivered to her, and in respect of which she has entered into no written engagement; and, secondly, whether, assuming that she has rendered her estate liable for such general engagements, she can afterwards, before a decree in equity has been obtained against the separate estate, alien it, so as to defeat the claims of her creditors under such general engagements.

With regard to the first point, the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., (the latter of whom delivered a very elaborate judgment), arrived at the same, and as we think the right conclusion, viz. that the debt due for the furniture was payable out of the separate estate, although there was no written voucher for it—nothing, in effect, but the parol contract between the parties. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., however, laid down the following proposition as law, and upon it solely appears to have founded his judgment, viz. that if a married woman, having separate property, and living apart from her husband, buys goods, for which her husband is not liable, whether the sellers, when selling, are aware or unaware that she has property settled to her separate use, they could not charge either her or it with the price or value of the goods.

Great as our respect is for the legal acumen of the learned judge, we do not think that, either upon principle or authority, his opinion can be supported. The great judge who decided Hulme v. Tenant (1 Bro. C. C. 15)—Lord Thurlow (and not, as Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., says, Lord Rosalyn)—did not lay down any such proposition; and Lord Brougham in Murray v. Barlee (3 My. & K. 220), Lord Cottenham in Owens v. Dickenson (1 Cr. & Ph. 53), and Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., in Vaughan v. Vanderstegen (2 Drew. 183), certainly differ from the law as laid down by Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J. The notion that prevailed at one time, that any instrument executed by a married woman, such as a bond, bill of exchange, or promissory note, being invalid at law, operated only by way of an appointment upon her separate estate, has long since been exploded. Nor does there appear to be any authority for the proposition that a married woman, having separate estate, does not render it liable for debts which she may contract, and for which her husband is not liable, although they may not be evidenced by any writing.

The questions of Lord Brougham in Murray v. Barlee appear to be unanswerable. "Can there," he asks, "be any reason for holding that the liability of a married woman, or, more properly, her power of affecting her separate estate, shall only be exercised by a written instrument? Are we entitled to invent a rule, to add a new chapter to the Statute of Frauds, and to require writing where that act requires none? Is there any equity, reaching written dealings with the property, which extends not also to dealings in other ways, as by sale and delivery of goods? Shall necessary supplies for her maintenance not touch the estate, and yet money furnished to squander away at play be a charge on it, if fortified by a scrap in writing? No such distinction can be taken, upon any conceivable principle."

With regard to the second point, it was unnecessary for Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., to give, and he did not give, any opinion; but we think that Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., in considering that point—viz. how far the separate estate, assuming it to be affected by the contract, was taken out of its reach by the assignment—came to a right conclusion in reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; because, although the married woman, by contracting debts, thereby gives her creditors a right to proceed, and obtain what may be termed an equitable execution against her separate estate, she does not by such contracts create a lien or charge on her separate estate; such creditors, therefore, are liable to be defeated, either wholly or partially, by a bona fide alienation of the separate estate.

We very much fear, however, that the manner in which Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., has explained the principle upon which the separate estate of a married woman may be rendered liable for her contracts not evidenced by writing, may lead to many doubts and to much litigation. His Lordship thinks, "that in order to bind the separate estate by a general engagement, it should appear that the engagement was made with reference to, and upon the faith or credit of, that estate; and that whether it was so made or not is a question to be judged of by this Court upon all the circumstances of the case." In other words, the effect of a contract by a married woman on her separate estate is only to be determined by the costly experiment of a suit in Chancery, where the judges themselves at present appear by no means to have made up their minds upon the subject.

It is nevertheless true, as observed by Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., that "what might affect the separate estate, in the case of a married woman living separate from her husband, might not affect it in the case of a married woman living with her husband."

We do not see why the rule should not be plainly laid down, that the separate estate of a married woman should in all cases be liable for her engagements, whether they are in writing, or merely by parol, except where they are entered into by her, either expressly or by implication, as agent for her husband.

Suppose, for instance, a married woman, living with her husband, orders, as in Montague v. Benedict (3 B. & Cr. 331), jewellery to such an amount as that she cannot be considered to have acted under any implied authority from her husband, so as to render him liable, why should not the person who supplied her with the jewellery have power to proceed against her separate estate, without entering into the question whether she contracted with reference to, or on the faith of, her separate estate or not?

Of course, the separate estate of a married woman living with her husband would not be liable for ordinary household expenditure, inasmuch as the wife, in contracting debts for such purpose, would act as agent for her husband.

So, when a married woman is living separate from her husband, we do not see why her separate estate should not be liable for all her debts, without reference to her intention in contracting them, if they be of such a nature, and contracted under such circumstances, as that her husband would not be liable for them upon the ground of either express or implied agency.

WILLIAM WHITTAKER BARRY, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 1861. Price 15s. cloth.

"The utility of such a work, if well done, is manifest. The law is presented in a shape fitted to be read and remembered, and the student will find it especially valuable. We regret that the many claims upon our space forbid indulgence in extract, but the reader will perhaps accept our assurance that the work has been very well done; the law is conveniently arranged for reference, and stated with singular clearness and precision."—Law Times, Feb. 23, 1861.

"A book like this was really a desideratum. At all events, nowhere else can be found so clear and intelligible an account, in a substantive form, of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, Sir George Turner's Act, the Trustee Relief Act, the Infants' Settlement and Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, and other statutes under which the Court exercises its special jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal, Feb. 9, 1861.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 20, 1861.

WE recently directed attention to the bill brought into the House of Commons by Sir John Trelawny, to abolish the objection to the incompetency of witnesses on the ground of the want of religious belief. (Ante, p. 95). That bill, it will be remembered, was introduced in consequence of the rejection in a county court of the testimony of a person who was an avowed Atheist, and similar instances have occurred in other places. But instead of providing that persons in that unhappy state of mind may be examined, allowing the jury to judge of their credibility, which we think would be a decided improvement in our law, the bill of Sir J. Trelawny purports to legislate for two very different classes of persons—those who "shall refuse or be unwilling from alleged conscientious motives to be sworn," and those "who shall express a desire to make an affirmation in lieu of an oath"—both of which he proposes to allow to give evidence on solemn affirmation and declaration, if they "solemnly, sincerely, and truly affirm and declare that an oath would not, in their judgment, oblige them more closely to speak what is true than their deliberate undertaking so to do;" subject, however, to the penalties of perjury for giving false testimony. This bill not only meets the case of the Atheist, but supplies an effectual shelter to persons who believe in the sanction of an oath, but wish to evade its obligation. The discussion on the second reading of the bill stands adjourned, with, as would appear from the debate, very faint prospect of its success.

But, opposed as we are to Sir J. Trelawny's bill, for the above as well as other reasons, we cannot help feeling that the law on the present subject is by no means in a satisfactory state. The general rule is, that witnesses must be sworn—"non creditur nisi juratis;" but there are some important exceptions. Quakers, Moravians, and Separatists, and persons who have belonged to either of the former sects, are allowed to make solemn affirmation instead of oath in all cases, civil and criminal; and by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 20, all other persons who have conscientious objections to taking oaths in any form are allowed the like privilege in civil cases. Now, we are glad to find that, since the partial discussion of Sir J. Trelawny's bill, this matter has been taken in hand by Mr. Locke, who has introduced a bill which has been read the first time, and we hope will be successful, to extend to criminal cases the above-mentioned enactment of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854. There can surely be no difference in principle between civil and criminal cases in this respect; and it certainly does seem anomalous, that if a murder or other felony is committed in the presence of a person, who from conscientious motives refuses to be sworn, the criminal must on that account be allowed to escape with impunity, while the solemn affirmation of the very same person would be receivable in a civil suit where millions are at stake.

Before dismissing the subject, we desire once more to revert to the case of the Atheist. An additional argument that Atheism should be looked on as an objection to credit, and not to competency, may be found in this, that there is every reason to believe that the affectation or pretence of it is sometimes resorted to as a means for stifling testimony. A case, recently reported in the newspapers, at least shews the necessity of instituting full inquiry when an avowal of Atheism is made by a witness. The case in question is that of Reg. v. Williams, who was tried for murder at Swansea, before Byles, J., on the 25th March, 1861, and we have been favoured, by one of the counsel concerned, with a note of that part of it that bears on our present subject. One of the witnesses against the prisoner was his sister. When she came into the box she was examined on the voir dire by the counsel for the prisoner, who asked, had she any religious belief; to which she replied, she had not. Had the matter rested here, she was evidently incompetent; but she was cross-examined by the counsel for the prosecution, Mr. S. H. Giffard, as follows:—

"Q. Do you know the difference between right and wrong?—A. Yes.

"Q. Is it right or wrong to tell a lie?—A. It is wrong.

"Q. Do you believe that a person can be punished after death for wrong done in life?—A. Perhaps he can.

"Q. Who would punish?—A. I suppose God would.

"Q. Do you believe, if a person died impenitent after taking a false oath, God would punish him?—A. Yes."

Whether the first answer, that she "had no religious belief," was dictated by the witness misunderstanding the question put to her, as meaning did she belong to any particular religious sect; or by a desire to save the accused by pretending Atheism, seems questionable: but her subsequent answers clearly establishing her competency, the witness was sworn.

Since the above was penned, Mr. Locke's bill has been read a second time.

DIRECT AND PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE—PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.

THE newspapers give the following report of a case tried on the 4th instant, at Chester, before Byles, J.:—

"Joseph Maddox was indicted for perjury.

"Mr. Brandt prosecuted; Mr. M. Lloyd defended the prisoner.

"It appeared that in 1857 one John Conelly was convicted of an unnatural offence before the late Baron Watson at the assizes, and sentence of death was recorded against him. The unhappy man has since died while in penal servitude, to which he was sentenced for life. Since his death, from certain evidence that came to light, the prisoner at the bar, who was one of the principal witnesses on the former occasion, and who swore to having seen the act committed, was arrested, and committed for trial at these assizes.

"His Lordship suggested that, as Mr. Horatio Lloyd was counsel for the prosecution in the trial against Conelly, it was right that Mr. Lloyd should be examined.

"He was then sworn, and requested to read his note of the cross-examination from his brief on that occasion. His Lordship conducted his examination, the counsel on either side stating that they would rather leave it in his Lordship's hands.

"The details are entirely unfit for publication, and, after a most painful and protracted trial, .

"His Lordship summed up with his usual care and minuteness, leaving it entirely to the jury to say whether they believed the witnesses or not.

"The jury found a verdict of guilty, and "His Lordship, after commenting on the enormity of the offence, sentenced the prisoner to eighteen months' imprisonment, with hard labour."

This case, assuming it correctly reported, is worthy of remark for three reasons. First, as illustrating the truth of the well-known observation respecting accusations for rape, unnatural offences, &c., that they are easily made, and difficult to be disproved. Secondly, as a proof, if indeed one be wanting, that direct evidence may lead to unjust condemnation quite as effectually as circumstantial or presumptive evidence, and thus supplying an answer to the unreflecting outcry so often raised against the latter. Thirdly, one of the favourite arguments of those who advocate the abolition of the punishment of death in all cases is, that the punishment is irrevocable; whereas, say they, if a man is unjustly condemned to imprisonment or penal servitude, he can be released at any moment should his innocence appear. But these persons overlook the fact, of which this case seems an instance, that death may be induced by imprisonment or hard labour, joined to the depressing influence created by the ignominy of a public conviction, and the uncertainty of the vindication of innocence, quite as effectually as by the hands of an executioner. When the death penalty is inflicted, the punishment, indeed, becomes irrevocable sooner, but that is all. We do not stop to inquire how far the consideration that it does so influences the minds of tribunals towards caution in inflicting it, nor how far the notion of the revocability of punishment being continually present to their view tends to produce hasty and unjust convictions.

RETURNS RELATING TO DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

SOME valuable returns on this subject have been made to the House of Commons, in obedience to an order granted on the motion of Mr. Malins. From these we extract the following:—

Since the passing of the Divorce Act (the 28th August, 1857) there have been—

1.—604 petitions filed for dissolution of marriage for acts of adultery committed in the following years—i. e. in 1823, 1; 1833, 3; 1834, 2; 1836, 1; 1837, 1; 1838, 2; 1839, 2; 1840, 4; 1841, 8; 1842, 2; 1843, 3; 1844, 10; 1845, 6; 1846, 11; 1847, 17; 1848, 15; 1849, 8; 1850, 27; 1851, 30; 1852, 25; 1853, 36; 1854, 38; 1855, 39; 1856, 59; 1857 (up to the 28th August, 36; subsequent to the 28th August, 43), 79; 1858, 85; 1859, 66; and 1860, 24.

2.—195 petitions for judicial separation. For adultery: committed in 1833, 1; 1841, 1; 1844, 1; 1846, 4; 1849, 1; 1850, 1; 1851, 1; 1852, 5; 1853, 4; 1854, 6; 1855, 7; 1856, 7; 1857, 16; 1858, 10; 1859, 10; and 1860, 4. For cruelty: committed in 1826, 1; 1830, 1; 1833, 1; 1836, 1; 1837, 1; 1838, 5; 1839, 1; 1840, 1; 1841, 1; 1842, 1; 1844, 1; 1845, 2; 1846, 1; 1847, 3; 1848, 1; 1849, 1; 1850, 4; 1851, 4; 1852, 4; 1853, 3; 1854, 9; 1855, 5; 1856, 9; 1857, 15; 1858, 16; 1859, 6; and 1860, 3. For desertion: in 1833, 1; 1842, 1; 1843, 1; 1844, 1; 1849, 1; 1850, 2; 1852, 1; 1853, 4; 1854, 1; and 1856, 2.

3.—32 petitions for the restitution of conjugal rights. Of these the parties separated in 2 cases in 1839; in 1 case in 1843; 2 in 1853; 2 in 1855; 1 in 1856; 7 in 1857; 12 in 1858; 4 in 1859; and 1 in 1860.

4.—13 petitions for nullity of marriage. Of these the years of the alleged marriages were as follows:—In 1834, 1; in 1839, 2; in 1840, 1; in 1851, 1; in 1852, 2; in 1854, 1; in 1855, 1; in 1857, 2; in 1858, 1; and in 1859, 1.

5.—85 applications for protection of wife's property. Of these the desertion took place in 1 case in the year 1819; 1 in 1824; 1 in 1825; 1 in 1827; 1 in 1833; 4 in 1834; 1 in 1835; 5 in 1836; 1 in 1837; 2 in 1838; 2 in 1839; 2 in 1841; 1 in 1842; 3 in 1843; 1 in 1844; 1 in 1845; 2 in 1846; 2 in 1847; 3 in 1849; 7 in 1850; 6 in 1851; 4 in 1852; 4 in 1853; 5 in 1854; 7 in 1855; 3 in 1856; 4 in 1857; 6 in 1858; 2 in 1859; and 2 in 1860.

6.—From the 11th January, 1858, to the 21st August, 1860, 239 dissolutions have been decreed, and 19 refused. Of these 212 were undefended at the trial.

7.—On the 21st August, 1860, 141 causes for dissolution of marriage were set down for trial.

No record has been kept of the cases where the petitioner was examined.

BARRY'S STATUTORY JURISDICTION IN CHANCERY, 1861.

Just published,

A TREATISE on the STATUTORY JURISDICTION of the COURT of CHANCERY. With Forms. By WILLIAM WHITTAKER BARRY, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 1861. Price 15s. cloth.

"The utility of such a work, if well done, is manifest. The law is presented in a shape fitted to be read and remembered, and the student will find it especially valuable. We regret that the many claims upon our space forbid indulgence in extract, but the reader will perhaps accept our assurance that the work has been very well done; the law is conveniently arranged for reference, and stated with singular clearness and precision."—Law Times, Feb. 23, 1861.

"A book like the present was really a desideratum. At all events, nowhere else can be found so clear and intelligible an account, in a substantive form, of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, the Land's Clauses Consolidation Act, Sir George Turner's Act, the Trustee Relief Acts, the Infants' Settlement and Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts, and other statutes under which the Court exercises its special jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal, Feb. 9, 1861.

V. & R. Stevens & Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

THE LAW, ITS PRESENT STATE AND PRACTICE.

A Library of condensed Treatises, Reports, and Statutes.

A CONCISE PRACTICAL ABRIDGMENT of the COMMON and STATUTE LAW, as at present administered in the Common-law, Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Courts, excluding all that is not essentially and practically useful; with detailed Directions, Forms, and Precedents; a Dictionary of Law Terms and Maxims. Second Edition. By CHARLES PETERSDORFF, Serjeant at Law. In Monthly Parts, 5s. each, to be completed in 5 vols. of Six Parts each. Part 4, April 1.

The work comprises all details required by the practitioner. By its mode of publication it is especially adapted to the use of students, who, by perusing each monthly part, noting it up with one of the periodicals supplying the statutes and reports, would, on the completion of the work, have mastered everything necessary for an examination, and requisite to the practising lawyer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 27, 1861.

A BILL has been introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Hodgkinson which well deserves the attention alike of jurists and practitioners. It is intitled "A Bill to prevent frivolous or fictitious Defences to Actions for Recovery of Debts;" and after reciting that creditors are often unjustly delayed and put to unnecessary expense in recovering debts, by reason of frivolous and vexatious defences to actions brought for the recovery of such debts, proposes to enact, "If the plaintiff, or one of the plaintiffs if more than one, in any action which shall be commenced in any of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster for recovery of a debt or liquidated demand in money, of the particulars of which a special indorsement may be made on the writ, pursuant to 'The Common-law Procedure Act, 1852,' shall, together with the præcipe on which such writ shall be issued, file or deliver an affidavit in Form No. 1 set forth in the schedule to this act, or to the like effect, no defendant in such action shall be at liberty to enter an appearance, unless he shall, with the memorandum of appearance, deliver to the proper officer an affidavit in the Form No. 2 set forth in the schedule to this act, or to the like effect, or unless he shall obtain leave from a judge of any of the said courts to appear to such writ, on paying into court the sum indorsed on the writ, or upon an affidavit or affidavits, satisfactory to the judge, which disclose a legal or equitable defence to the action, or such facts as the judge may deem sufficient to support the application, and on such terms, as to security or otherwise, as to the judge may seem fit."

The forms here referred to are as follows:—

No. 1.

"In the Queen's Bench.

"A. B., who (together with C. D., or C. D. and others) is about to commence an action in the above court for recovery of £— from E. F., maketh oath and saith, that the said E. F. is justly and truly indebted to him, the plaintiff [or to him and his intended co-plaintiffs], in the said sum."

No. 2.

"In the Queen's Bench.

"A. B., plaintiff, against C. D., or against C. D. and another, or against C. D. and others.

"The defendant C. D. hereby maketh oath and saith, that he verily believes he has a good defence to the whole claim of £— made by the plaintiff in the said action [or to £—, part of the claim of £— made by the plaintiff in such action]."

The idea of this bill seems to have been taken, in part at least, from the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67). That act; after reciting that bona fide holders of dishonoured bills and promissory notes were often unjustly delayed and put to unnecessary expense in recovering the amount thereof, by reason of frivolous or fictitious defences to actions thereon, and it was expedient that greater facilities than then existed should be given for the recovery of money due on such bills and notes; gives a special form of writ of summons for all actions on bills of exchange or promissory notes commenced within six months after due; whereby the defendant is informed, that unless he obtains leave to appear and defend, the plaintiff may, within twelve days of the service of the writ, proceed to judgment and execution; and then enacts, in its 2nd section, "A judge shall, upon application within the period of twelve days from service, give leave to appear to such writ, and to defend the action, on the defendant paying into court the sum indorsed on the writ, or upon affidavits, satisfactory to the judge, which disclose a legal or equitable defence, or such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to prove consideration, or such other facts as the judge may deem sufficient to support the application, and on such terms as to security or otherwise as to the judge may seem fit." This statute may be looked upon as a strong measure; but Mr. Day, in his "Common-law Procedure Acts, &c." (p. 284, note), informs us that "it was urged upon the Legislature to treat dishonoured bills as quasi judgments; but this foreign practice, which seems to be based on no sound principle whatever, the Legislature refused to adopt."

The right of every man to defend himself against any charge, civil or criminal, is one which has not only been recognised by the law of England in every age, but is founded on an elementary principle of natural justice, and is known over almost all the world. Exceptions may, indeed, be found. Thus, by the ancient law of Scotland, the pannel—i. e. the accused—was not allowed to make any proof contrary to the averment of the libel (indictment); and a like principle may be traced in the laws of some other countries. (See on this subject Hume's Criminal Law of Scotland, vol. 2, pp. 297 et seq.) The Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act is an improvement upon this: for the Scotch practice might perhaps be defended or extenuated on the ground that it was confined to criminal cases; and that those averments in libels to which the law attributed such unerring veracity were inserted in them by the officers of the Government, acting under grave responsibility; whereas by the English act the assumption of infallibility is extended to averments inserted in proceedings instituted by private individuals suing for real or imaginary debts due to themselves. It is true, indeed, that by that statute the defendant may defend himself, if he "obtains leave" of a judge to do so; but how is any judge competent to decide such a matter without virtually trying the cause? It is also important to observe, that the judge decides without a jury, and sitting in a private room, in which, according to recent regulation (ante, p. 97), not more than the parties attending two summonses are allowed to be present; and as no official record is made of the evidence, all the usual checks on tribunals—a jury, publicity, and recordation—are removed.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, and the bill before us, are levelled against the abuse of parties defending suits for delay, and with the view of creating costs and causing vexation to plaintiffs; but we cannot help thinking that this desirable object might be attained without having recourse to the anomalous and unconstitutional remedies they offer. The above statute is comparatively harmless in practice, for a reason not very gratifying to its framers—viz. that the judges rarely exercise the right which it confers on them of excluding any man from defending his suit, if he offers any reason, however trivial or questionable in itself, that he ought to be permitted to do so. But the bill of Mr. Hodgkinson, should it ever become law, will not be quite so innocent. The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, is limited to bills of exchange and promissory notes, whereas this bill extends to most other cases of debts or liquidated demands in money (including, consequently, cases on bonds, &c. where the defence is that the instrument sued on is a forgery, &c.): and we have seen that it does not empower the judge to suppress the defence at his discretion or pleasure in all cases; for although the defendant has the alternative of satisfying the judge that he ought to be let in to defend, he can attain the same object in a more certain and summary manner by making affidavit, according to Schedule No. 2, that "he verily believes he has a good defence to the claim made by the plaintiff." This is a kind of affidavit which every unprincipled defendant would make without scruple; and as every unprincipled plaintiff would have as little scruple in making the affidavit required by Schedule No. 1, that the debt claimed is due to him from the defendant, the general effect of the proposed enactment would be, to sow a fruitful crop of perjury, without, as appears to us, any real advantage to justice.

THE ARRANGEMENT CLAUSES IN THE BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL

THE clauses in the Attorney-General's bill with respect to arrangements by deed between debtors and creditors appear to have been as little considered by the Profession or the public as by the learned gentleman who introduced the bill, or by those whom he has employed to fabricate it. The clauses as they stand in the amended bill are as follows:—

"200. Every deed or instrument made or entered into between a debtor and his creditors, or any of them, or a trustee on their behalf, relating to the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, management, and winding up of his estate, or any of such matters, shall be as valid and effectual, and binding on all the creditors of such debtor, as if they were parties to and had duly executed the same, provided the following conditions be observed; that is to say:—

- "(1). A majority in number, including three-fourths in value, of the creditors of such debtor whose debts shall respectively amount to 10% and upwards, shall, before or after the execution thereof by the debtor, in writing assent to or approve of such deed or instrument:
- "(2). If a trustee or trustees be appointed by such deed or instrument, such trustee or trustees shall execute the same:
- "(3). The execution of such deed or instrument by the debtor shall be attested by an attorney or solicitor:

- "(4). Immediately on the execution thereof by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession, shall be given to the trustees:
- "(5). Within twenty-eight days from the day of the execution of such deed or instrument by the debtor the same shall be produced and left (having been first duly stamped) at the office of the chief registrar, for the purpose of being registered:
- "(6). Together with such deed or instrument there shall be delivered to the chief registrar an affidavit, by the debtor or some other person able to depose thereto, or a certificate by the trustee or trustees, that a majority in number, including three-fourths in value, of the creditors of the debtor whose debts amount to 10*l.* or upwards, have in writing assented to or approved of such deed or instrument, and also stating the amount in value of the property and credits of the debtor comprised in such deed:
- "(7). Such deed or instrument shall, before registration, bear such ordinary ad valorem stamp duties as are hereinafter provided:

On fulfilment of the conditions aforesaid such deed or instrument shall be valid and effectual.

"201. The date, names, and descriptions of the parties to every such deed or instrument, not including the creditors, together with a short statement of the nature and effect thereof, shall be entered by the chief registrar in a book to be kept exclusively for the purposes of such registration. Such entry shall be made within forty-eight hours after the deed shall have been left with the registrar as aforesaid, and a copy of such entry shall be published in the London Gazette within four days after the making of such entry.

"202. Every deed, instrument, or agreement whatsoever, by which a debtor, not being a bankrupt, conveys, or covenants or agrees to convey, his estate and effects, or the principal part thereof, for the benefit of his creditors, or makes any arrangement or agreement with his creditors, or any person on their behalf, for the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, or winding up of his affairs or estate, or the release or discharge of such debtor from his debts or liabilities, shall, within twenty-eight days from and after the execution thereof by such debtor, or within such further time as the chief court shall allow, be registered in the Court of Bankruptcy; and in default thereof shall not be received in evidence.

"203. No deed or instrument whatever required to be registered as aforesaid shall be registered unless, in addition to the ordinary stamp duty, it also be impressed with, or have affixed to it, a stamp denoting a duty computed at the rate of 5*s.* upon every 100*l.*, or fraction of 100*l.*, of the sworn or certified value of the estate or effects comprised in, or to be collected or distributed under, such deed or instrument: provided that the maximum of ad valorem duty payable in respect of any such deed or instrument shall be 200*l.*

"204. Every such deed, on being so registered as aforesaid, shall have a memorandum thereof written on the face of such deed, stating the day and the hour of the day at which the same was brought into the office of the chief registrar for registration.

"205. From and after the registration of every such deed or instrument in manner aforesaid, the debtor and creditors, and trustees, parties to such deed, or who have assented thereto or are bound thereby, shall, in all matters relating to the estate and effects of such debtor, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall respectively have the benefit of and be liable to all the provisions of this act, in the same or like manner as if the debtor had been adjudged a bankrupt, and the creditors had proved, and the trustees had been appointed creditors' assignees under such bankruptcy; and the existing or future trustees of any such deed or instrument, and the creditors under the same, shall, as between themselves respectively, and as between themselves and the debtor, and against third persons, have the same powers, rights, and remedies, with respect to the debtor and his estate and effects, and the collection and recovery of the same, as are possessed or may be used or exercised by assignees or creditors with respect to the bankrupt, or his acts, estate, and effects in bankruptcy; and, except where the deed shall expressly provide otherwise, the court shall determine all questions arising under the deed, according to the law and practice in bankruptcy, so far as they may be applicable, and shall have power to make and enforce all such orders as it would be authorised to do if the debtor in such deed had been adjudged bankrupt, and his estate were administered in bankruptcy.

"206. After notice of the filing and registration of such deed has been given as aforesaid, no execution, sequestration, or other process against the debtor's property in respect of any debt, and no process against his person in respect of any debt, other than such process by writ or warrant as may be had against a debtor about to depart out of England, shall be available to any creditor or claimant, without leave of the court; and a certificate of the filing and registration of such deed, under the hand of the chief registrar and the seal of the court, shall be available to the debtor for all purposes as a protection in bankruptcy.

"207. In case any petition shall be presented for an adjudication in bankruptcy against a debtor after his execution of such deed or instrument as is hereinbefore described, and pending the time allowed for the registration of such deed or instrument, all proceedings under such petition may be stayed, if the court shall think fit; and in case such deed or instrument shall be duly registered as aforesaid, the petition shall be dismissed.

"208. If a debtor cannot obtain the assent of a majority in number, including three-fourths in value, of his creditors, by reason of his being unable to ascertain by whom bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other negotiable securities accepted, drawn, made, or indorsed by him are holden, or by reason of the absence of creditors in a foreign country, or other similar circumstances, it shall be sufficient if he obtain the consent of three-fourths in number and value of all his other creditors to such deed or instrument as aforesaid; provided that in either of such cases the affidavit or certificate of the trustee or trustees shall state the circumstances of the case, and the same shall be allowed by the court; and provided the deed or instrument be in such form as is expressed in Schedule (B.) [it should be (D.)] to this act annexed, which shall vest all the estate and effects of the debtor in the trustees of such deed; and provided that all such other conditions as are hereinbefore required be duly complied with."

The following observations occur upon these clauses:—

Sect. 200. The second condition in this section assumes that a deed may be within the clause although no trustee is appointed; but the fourth condition makes it imperative that possession of the estate shall be given to the trustees. A deed providing for the winding up of the estate by the debtor under inspection would therefore be inoperative under this section; and it is scarcely necessary to observe, that it would seldom be possible to find competent trustees who would undertake the responsibility attendant on the actual custody and administration of the estate.

Sect. 202. A deed, by which a debtor agrees with all his creditors for a composition, or for winding up under inspection, is to be inadmissible in evidence unless registered in bankruptcy within twenty-eight days, or such further time as the "chief court" shall allow. Why made inadmissible in evidence, and not void, it would be vain to ask. But it is intolerable that registration and the interference of the Court of Bankruptcy should be made the necessary incidents of an arrangement which concerns no one except the parties who enter into it, and who are competent to provide for their own protection. The words are, "his creditors," which literally import all the creditors; and that is the meaning attributed to the same words in the arrangement clauses of the act of 1849. But the design of the clause now under consideration seems to be to include all arrangements with creditors, whether with the whole class or with a portion of them; and if that interpretation is adopted there will be no end to the questions as to what deeds of arrangement between a debtor and two or more of his creditors must be stamped according to the value of the debtor's assets and registered in bankruptcy, in order to be admissible in evidence.

Sect. 203. It is proposed to impose on every deed of arrangement between a debtor and his creditors (or any of them?), in addition to the ordinary stamp duty on a deed, an ad valorem stamp duty, at the rate of 5s. per 100l. (twice the rate of a mortgage stamp), of the value of the debtor's assets. The policy of recent legislation has been to reduce the stamp duties on deeds, which are acknowledged to be a very objectionable source of revenue. It is now proposed to take a step backwards by imposing a heavy duty on insolvent estates. The duty is to be paid on "the sworn or certified value of the estate or effects," but no direction is given as to the person who is to swear to or certify the value in the case of any deed not intended to operate under the 200th section.

Sect. 205. "From and after the registration of every such deed or instrument in manner aforesaid," the debtor and the creditors bound by the deed, and the debtor's estate, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, in the same manner as if the debtor had been adjudged bankrupt and the creditors had proved (i. e. actual proof is to be dispensed with), and the trustees been appointed creditors' assignees. "Every such deed" includes all deeds within the 202nd section. So that a deed by which a debtor assigns part of his assets to trustees, in trust for part of his creditors, will operate as a bankruptcy and appointment of assignees, and deprive the entire body of his creditors of the right to vote in the choice of assignees. Moreover, every deed by which a debtor compounds with a few of his creditors will operate as an act of bankruptcy.

Further: by sects. 206 and 207, every deed of composition between a debtor and a few of his creditors, being registered, will operate as a complete protection of the debtor from process, and a bar to any proceedings for an adjudication of bankruptcy.

Lastly, a debtor may bind all his creditors residing abroad, and all the holders of his bills and notes who are unknown to him, if he obtains the consent of three-fourths in number and value of his other creditors.

We trust that the House of Lords will not allow these absurd, oppressive, and impracticable clauses to remain in the bill.

Reviews.

The Law of Debtor and Creditor; to which is subjoined a Table of the Courts in England and Wales for the Recovery of Debts. By CHARLES FRANCIS TROWER, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, late Fellow of Exeter College, and Vinerian Scholar, Oxford. 1860. [V. & R. Stevens & Sons, Sweet, and Maxwell.]

THIS book is unusual in title, object, and arrangement of materials, and is one of the most courageous attempts in legal literature that has come within the range of our reading. We cannot shew this better than by the following extracts from Mr. Trower's Preface:—

"It ought not to be too ambitious an aim to offer to the public, uno visu, a complete treatise of the law of debtor and creditor, instead of sending them to the equity shelves of a law library to know their equitable, and to those of the common law for their legal, rights. It ought not to be an impossible task to arrange and present exhaustively all the combinations of that relation. . . . By avoiding, as far as possible, everything which is not law at the present moment, by stating the results of decisions rather than their reasons, and by aiming at condensation of expression as well as of matter, it has appeared to me not a hopeless attempt to compress a practical treatise upon the entire subject into a single volume."

Mr. Trower's aim, then, is to condense into a practical treatise of one volume the whole law affecting debtors and creditors, dealing with every kind of debt, from the simplest contract to the judgment or decree of a superior court, and with every kind of intricacy introduced by death, marriage, partnership, bankruptcy law, ecclesiastical law, joint-stock companies' law, &c.

In writing this book, the first difficulty presented to the author, a Chancery barrister, was the treatment of common-law rights and remedies practically. This difficulty Mr. Trower has grappled manfully, and in doing so has displayed an amount of knowledge which would reflect credit on a common lawyer; at the same time, the fact that the author is a Chancery barrister is very perceptible in the treatment. Thus we find an elaborate exposition of the ways in which a judgment may accrue at common law, whether by default, verdict, demurrer, or otherwise, without any corresponding discussion as to decrees in equity, his greater practical familiarity with the latter learning making him forget that a discussion as to decrees must be quite as useful to the common-law reader as one about common-law judgments to an equity barrister. For the ends of the treatise, we, in truth, do not see any necessity for the latter; but if there be any, the former is certainly equally necessary. Another indication of the training of the author is the great predominance given to the subjects of judgments and mortgages, which occupy half the book—not that they are treated at too great a length, but that other matters do not receive an equal consideration.

The next difficulty was the arrangement of the material; and so great must this have been, that we feel great diffidence in criticising the method that has been adopted by Mr. Trower. In doing so, however, we must bear in mind that the treatise is to be looked on especially as one for reference. This is not merely shewn by Mr. Trower's own Preface, but is obvious from the nature of the book—condensed, yet practical. One great essential, therefore, is, that the matter should be arranged as nearly as possible in accordance with the methods to which the Profession are accustomed—i. e. as nearly as possible in divisions corresponding to the different standard books on the subjects involved in the work. For instance, we suggest that it would have been well to have kept the learning as to partnership together, to have similarly treated the law as to companies, and so on. We will not offer any decided opinion as to whether or not the method adopted by Mr. Trower may not be more symmetrical than the one we suggest, but we are inclined to think that the latter would have been quite as symmetrical, less involved, and more useful.

We now have to consider how far Mr. Trower has been successful in condensing the learning on so many subjects into so small a space. In this respect he has succeeded far beyond what we believed possible; in other words, his learning and judgment have enabled him to collect nearly as much valuable information on the different subjects as can be contained in so few pages, and to lose very little space. This information is also such as has never yet been collected in one treatise. This feature makes the book valuable, though, of course, a work of this size is not calculated to obviate the necessity of referring to books especially devoted to one or other of the various subjects here treated by Mr. Trower. This is no discredit to him, as it arises from the simple impossibility of putting the same information into one page as can be crammed into a score. Where he gives himself most space, there his book is most valuable. On judgments and mortgages (to which, as we have before stated, he has devoted half this volume) he has collected a quantity of valuable information; on the law of executors and administrators much is to be gathered from his book; but on the other branches, especially on the branch of simple contracts, the information is comparatively meagre, from the scanty space allotted to them.

Such a treatise as this cannot but reflect high credit on its author, both from the learning and judgment it displays, and from its great object of collecting law from both sides of Westminster Hall. We can recommend this book as containing an amount of valuable learning rarely contained in so small a space, especially on the subjects of judgments and mortgages; and we especially draw the attention of the Legal Profession to its combination of legal and equitable information.

TRADESMEN'S BOOKS AS EVIDENCE.

THE newspapers contain the following report of a case of Tickner v. Arbuthnot, tried before Erle, C. J., and a special jury, at the Kingston Assizes, which have just concluded:—

"The action was brought by Mr. Tickner, a poulterer and fishmonger at Kingston, against Mr. George Arbuthnot, a gentleman holding an appointment in the Treasury, to recover 34*l.*, the balance of an account for poultry and fish supplied to his establishment between the months of August, 1858, and October, 1860; to which the defendant pleaded that he was not indebted. Mr. Edwin James, Q. C., and Mr. Needham appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Hawkins, Q. C., and Mr. Sumner for the defendant. It appeared that the plaintiff had supplied articles to the family for two or three years, and a young woman named Sarah Cook, who was cook in the establishment, used to order what was required; but in August, 1858, Mr. Arbuthnot, being dissatisfied with some article that had been supplied, told the cook not to deal with Mr. Tickner any more, but to purchase what was required from another shop. Up to this time Mr. Arbuthnot had been in the habit of paying his account with Mr. Tickner regularly every quarter by a cheque; but after August, 1858, the cook received money to pay for everything that was required for the table; and this went on until October, 1860, when it was discovered that the cook had been pilfering and embezzling money, and she was given into custody, and sentenced to imprisonment. Up to this time the defendant had not the slightest conception that his cook had been dealing with the plaintiff; but after the examination before the magistrate, and just as Mr. Arbuthnot was about to leave the court, the plaintiff handed him a sealed packet, which was found to contain a book with items of goods supplied, and a bill claiming the amount mentioned as a balance due from the defendant. Knowing that he had paid for every article that had been supplied, and that he had also positively interdicted the cook from dealing with the plaintiff, Mr. Arbuthnot resolved to resist the claim, and hence the present action. In support of the case for the plaintiff, he and his wife were examined, and they proved that the articles charged for had been supplied, and that the balance claimed remained unpaid. They at the same time, however, admitted that down to August, 1858, the accounts were paid every quarter by a cheque, and they did not deny that about this time some complaint was made by Mr. Arbuthnot through the cook; but they said they did not remember that she at the same time told them that the defendant had told her not to deal with them any more. It appeared, however, that after this, instead of the accounts being paid quarterly, as they were previously, the cook used to pay small sums, such as 1*l.*, 1*l.* 10*s.*, and 2*l.* at a time, and the result was, that at the time the cook was given into custody the balance now claimed remained due. In the course of the case the books of the plaintiff were produced, and the plaintiff admitted, that, with respect to one payment by the cook, the entry originally stood as though she was the party to whom credit was given, but that, after these proceedings commenced, he had added the words, "off Arbuthnot's account," to make it appear as though the defendant was the party to whom credit was given. The young woman Sarah Cook was called as a witness for the defendant, and she stated distinctly that in August, 1858, she told the plaintiff that she was not to deal with him any more, and that he told her there was no necessity to change, and she might continue to buy of him, and her master would know nothing about it; and at his request she consented to do so; but she said that Mr. Arbuthnot gave her the money to pay for every article that was purchased after this, and she used to pay the plaintiff small sums from time to time off his account, but Mr. Arbuthnot never knew that she was dealing with him.

"Erle, C. J., in summing up, said, that where a master allowed his servant to pledge his credit with a tradesman, that credit continued, and he would be liable to pay for all goods obtained by the servant in his name, unless he gave the tradesman specific instructions to the contrary. Very great mischief, undoubtedly, arose from the circumstance of tradesmen getting servants into their power, as was alleged had been done in the present case; and the first and most important question for the jury was, whether the cook had informed the plaintiff in August, 1858, that her master would not deal with him any longer, and that she had no authority to purchase any more articles from him; and if they believed this fact to have been established by the evidence, there was an end to the plaintiff's claim. The learned judge then referred to the facts, and said, that if it was true that the servant had told the plaintiff that she was desired not to deal with him any longer, and that he induced her to deceive her master, and continue dealing with him secretly, such an act on the part of a tradesman was most improper.

"The jury immediately returned a verdict for the defendant."

In the civil law, the law of Scotland, and in some parts of the United States of America, entries made by a tradesman in his books are admissible evidence in his favour; and several attempts have been made to establish a like law in this country. The law of England rejects such entries, upon the well-known principle that a man shall not be allowed to manufacture evidence for himself—that his own words, writings, and acts are evidence against, but not evidence for, him. The morality of the trading community among us is unhappily not so high at the present moment as to render it a fit one for conferring on tradesmen the power of constituting any man they please their debtor by merely making an entry to that effect in a book behind his back; and the above case of Tickner v. Arbutnot affords an illustration of the consequences that might be expected from the proposed alteration in the law. Suppose the entry, "off Arbutnot's account," had been received as evidence against the defendant, and that the plaintiff had not broken down on cross-examination, as he appears to have done, what must have been the result to the defendant? And the mischief to him would be still more certain if the plaintiff had died, and the action were brought by a personal representative, who knew nothing about the circumstances connected with the entry.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 4, 1861.

THE policy of stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36 (commonly called the Mortmain Act), though it may be in some respects defective, is, we think, on the whole, admirable, and it has to a very great extent prevented that public mischief stated in its preamble to have "greatly increased," viz. "large and improvident alienations or dispositions made by languishing or dying persons, or by other persons, to uses called charitable uses, to take place after their deaths, to the disherison of their lawful heirs."

The bill, which with some amendments afterwards became the act 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, was prepared by Ord, Glanville, and Plumer, with the assistance of Sir Joseph Jekyll, M. R.; and the 2nd section, as to purchases by charities, was added by amendment in the House of Lords, and was afterwards agreed to by the Commons.

The 2nd section appears to have been misapprehended, inasmuch as persons seem to have thought that purchases by charities were wholly exempted from the operation of the act; whereas it was essential to their validity that the requirements of the act, as set forth in the 1st section, should be complied with in all respects save one, viz. the sealing and delivery of any deed or deeds twelve calendar months at least before the death of the grantor. In effect, it is essential to the validity of purchases to charitable uses, under the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, that the conveyance should be by deed indented, sealed and delivered in the presence of two or more credible witnesses; that it should be enrolled in the Court of Chancery within six months after its execution; that it should take effect in possession, for the charitable use intended, immediately from the making thereof, and be without any power of revocation, reservation, trust, condition, limitation clause, or agreement whatsoever, for the benefit of the grantor or any person claiming under him; that it should be made really and bona fide for a full and valuable consideration actually paid at or before the making of such conveyance, without fraud or collusion; but such conveyance would be valid, although the grantor did not survive its execution twelve calendar months, as was required in the case of gifts.

To remedy the defect in titles of land purchased for charitable purposes under this misapprehension of the law, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 85, which has only a retrospective operation, was passed.

A bill, intituled "An Act to amend the Law relating to the Conveyance of Land for Charitable Uses," has been brought from the Lords to the House of Commons. It has both a prospective and retrospective operation, and proposes to effect changes in the Mortmain Act, some of which do not appear to be open to any objection; of others we cannot approve, and we hope that the bill, before it passes through Parliament, will be closely examined in the House of Commons, in order that the effect of the whole measure may be fully understood, and that, if any clause be found trenching in any way upon the great principles, carried out hitherto, as we believe, with considerable success, in the Mortmain Act, it may at once be eliminated from the bill.

The bill begins by reciting, in its preamble, part of the 1st section of stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36—not in a very accurate manner, for some portions of it appear to be omitted without any good cause; and in the eighth line, after the words “deed indented,” the words “and inrolled” are unnecessarily interpolated. It next recites stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 85, intitled “An Act for remedying a Defect in Titles of Lands purchased for Charitable Purposes,” which is referred to as the “now-reciting act”—a piece of bad grammar of which we should not like to see Parliament guilty, and which might be avoided by terming it “the act now in recital.”

The 1st clause in the bill is of a rather miscellaneous character, and might, we think, with very great advantage, so far as concerns clearness and accuracy of expression, have been broken up into three sections. It begins by enacting, “that no deed or assurance hereafter to be made, for any charitable uses whatsoever, of any hereditaments of any tenure whatsoever, or of any estate or interest therein, shall be deemed to be null and void by reason of such deed or assurance not being indented, or not purporting to be indented.

The next part of the section makes, we think, a considerable inroad upon the policy of the Mortmain Act; for it enacts, that a deed or assurance, or any deed forming part of the same transaction, is not to be null and void “by reason of its containing any grant or reservation of any peppercorn or other nominal rent, or of any mines or minerals or easement, or any covenants or provisions as to the erection, repair, position, or description of buildings, the formation or repair of streets or roads, drainage or nuisances, or any covenants or provisions of the like nature for the use and enjoyment as well of the hereditaments comprised in such deed or assurance as of any other adjacent or neighbouring hereditaments, or any right of entry on non-payment of any such rent or on breach of any such covenant or provision, or any stipulations of the like nature for the benefit of the donor or grantor, or of any other person or persons claiming under him.”

Now, when the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, was before the House of Lords, it was proposed, by amendment, to omit from the 1st clause that part which makes it essential to the validity of a conveyance to charitable uses that it should take effect in possession, and be without any power of revocation, reservation, trust, condition, limitation clause, or agreement whatsoever, for the benefit of the donor or grantor, or any person or persons claiming under him. The amendment, however, was objected to, and it was resolved that the words proposed to be omitted should stand part of the bill.

We think that it would be far better to reconsider fully the policy of that part of the Mortmain Act proposed in the House of Lords to be left out, and, if it be considered either bad or unnecessary, to repeal it altogether, or, if it merely requires amendment, to substitute a new provision for it, inasmuch as we anticipate that considerable difficulty may arise in construing this part of the bill (if it becomes an act) with the Mortmain Act, for the two clauses, put in juxtaposition one with another, make up an unsightly piece of legislative patchwork, not very creditable to Parliament, and not very intelligible to the country.

Next, an assurance of hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure is not to be null and void “by reason of the same not being made by deed.” Now, the surrender and admittance to copyholds are, as is well known, not evidenced by deed, but are entered on the court-roll, and the new tenant, on paying his fees, receives a copy of the entry on the court-roll. It is, we presume, intended that this copy of the entry on the court-roll should be inrolled in Chancery when hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure are assured to charitable uses. But if it is right to assume that lands of those tenures cannot at present be assured to charities by the Mortmain Act, we should have thought that some provision requiring the inrolment either of the covenant to surrender lands to charitable uses, or of the entry of the surrender and admittance on the court-roll, necessary.

The next part of this section very materially alters the 2nd clause of the Mortmain Act, which takes purchases by charities partially out of the operation of the 1st clause, since the conveyance is not required to be executed ~~twelve~~ calendar months at least before the death of the grantor, but such purchase is required to be “for a full and valuable consideration actually paid at or before the making of such conveyance, without fraud or collusion.” And by this bill such consideration may consist “wholly or partly of a rent, rent-charge, or other annual payment reserved or made payable to the vendor, or to any other person, with or without a right of re-entry for non-payment thereof.” And there is a proviso, that in all reservations authorised by the act, the donor, grantor, or vendor shall reserve the same benefits for his representatives as for himself.

We think a clause like that proposed in the bill opens a door for the evasion of the Mortmain Act. Take, for instance, the case of a person being on his death-bed, and therefore necessarily precluded from making a gift of land to charitable uses; he may, however, grant the lands to a charity, in consideration of a rent-charge, without a right of re-entry, reserving a rent, say to A., whom we will assume to be a person very much interested in the object of the charitable uses. Soon after the death of the grantor, A. surrenders the rent-charge to the charity by way of gift. Other cases might be put, and we think that the Legislature should consider well before they alter the Mortmain Law in this respect.

By the 2nd section it is proposed to enact, that “in all cases where the charitable uses of any deed or assurance hereafter to be made for conveyance of any hereditaments for any charitable uses shall be declared by any separate or other deed or instrument, it shall not be necessary, for the purposes of the first-recited act or of this act, to inrol such deed or assurance for conveyance; but every such deed or assurance for conveyance shall nevertheless be absolutely null and void unless such separate or other deed or instrument shall within ~~six~~ calendar months next after the making or perfecting of such deed or assurance for conveyance be inrolled in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery; and such inrolment as last aforesaid shall be deemed and treated, for all purposes of the first-recited act and of this act, as if such deed or assurance for conveyance had declared such charitable uses, and had been so inrolled as last aforesaid."

We presume that the object of this section is to save the expense of the inrolment of a deed, or perhaps of the entry of the surrender and admittance on the court-roll, whereby land is vested in trustees for a charity, whilst it renders the inrolment of the deed or instrument, declaring the charitable uses, imperative. We should think, however, that it would be far better that every instrument connected with a conveyance to charitable uses should be inrolled, thereby giving to all persons interested ample means of ascertaining at once the fact of the validity or invalidity of the transaction, at any rate, so far as it then could be ascertained by an inspection of the inrolment of the documents by which it was carried out.

We shall revert to the consideration of the remaining clauses of this bill at a future time, merely remarking at present that two of them are liable to the objection of being retrospective in their operation.

THE WILLS OF PERSONALTY BY BRITISH SUBJECTS BILL.

A CRUDE and imperfect attempt was made in a bill introduced by Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Malins, shortly after the decision of the case of Bremer v. Freeman by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (May 9, 1857), to remedy the inconvenience occasioned by the differences between the laws of England and those of foreign countries with respect to the mode of executing testamentary instruments. The bill was properly rejected, and we are glad to find that the attempt has been renewed by a lawyer so competent to deal with the subject as Lord Kingsdown. There can be no doubt that the proposed measure would create difficulty in some cases where none could arise under the law as it now exists; but we think that a candid consideration of the bill, and of the cases to which it would most frequently apply, will lead to the conclusion that its operation would be on the whole beneficial. The first two sections of the bill are as follows:—

"1. Every will and other testamentary instrument made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject (whatever may be the domicile of such person at the time of making the same, or at the time of his or her death) shall, as regards personal estate, be held to be well executed, and shall be admitted in England and Ireland to probate, and in Scotland to confirmation, if the same be made according to the forms required either by the law of the place where the same was made, or by the law of the place where such person was domiciled when the same was made, or by the laws then in force in any part of the United Kingdom.

"2. Every will and other testamentary instrument made within the United Kingdom by any British subject (whatever may be the domicile of such person at the time of making the same, or at the time of his or her death) shall, as regards personal estate, be held to be well executed, and shall be admitted in England and Ireland to probate, and in Scotland to confirmation, if the same be executed according to the forms required by the laws for the time being in force in that part of the United Kingdom where the same is made."

The object of the bill is of course to remedy, as far as can be done by British legislation, the inconvenience which arises in certain cases from the application of the rule of English law, that the validity of a testamentary disposition of moveable property, as regards the form and execution of the instrument, is governed by the law of the place where the testator was domiciled when he died—a rule which is not adopted on the continent, the maxim in France being, that, at least as regards a will made in that country, the forms prescribed by the law of the place where it is made, and not those of the testator's domicile, must be followed; while in Germany it seems that the testator may adopt either the form of the place where he makes his will or the form of the place of his domicile.

From the diversity of these rules and forms various inconveniences arise. A testator who has changed his domicile may forget to re-execute his will according to the form required by the law of his adopted country, or may make his will in the form to which he was accustomed in the place of his birth, or may die in a foreign country without having changed his domicile, having made his will abroad, formal according to the law of his domicile, informal according to that of the place where he died; or, having made a good foreign will while domiciled abroad, may die in an English domicile; or, lastly, there may be a doubt as to the domicile at the time of execution or of death, or the courts of two different countries may not agree as to the domicile of the same person. It is obvious that the only perfect resolution of all the complications would be an agreement among civilised States to adopt the same rule as to the execution of testamentary instruments. Stopping short of such an agreement, a great improvement might be effected by allowing to every testator the right to adopt the forms of the place of his birth, those of his domicile, or those of the place where the instrument is executed, at his option. This is what the bill before us is intended to do, so far as regards the recognition in the United Kingdom of the wills of British subjects. It is, unlike the bill of 1857, confined to the formal requisites to the validity of a will, and does not purport to affect its construction or operation when proved.

The remaining clauses of the bill are as follows:—

"3. No will or other testamentary instrument shall be held to be revoked or to have become invalid by reason of any subsequent change of domicile of the person making the same.

"4. Nothing in this act contained shall invalidate or affect any will or other testamentary instrument, as regards personal estate, which would have been valid if this act had not been passed, except as such will or other testamentary instrument may be revoked or altered by any subsequent will or testamentary instrument made valid by this act.

"5. This act shall extend only to wills and other testamentary instruments made by persons who die after the passing of this act."

The proposed alterations, then, are shortly these:—

1. To recognise in the United Kingdom, as valid, the will of a British subject made abroad, if executed according to the law of England or of Scotland, the law of the place of making, or the law of the place of domicile at the date of the will.

2. To recognise as valid the will of a British subject executed within the United Kingdom, according to the law of the place of making.

3. To recognise as valid, after a change of domicile, a will made anywhere, by any person, which would have been valid if the domicile had not been changed.

These alterations would introduce doubt and conflict of laws into some cases which, as the law stands, would be free from doubt. Thus, if an Englishman dies domiciled in France, leaving a will made there according to the English form, and not according to the French form, the English courts must, under the proposed enactment, recognise the will, while the French courts must disregard it, and the distribution of the several portions of the testator's personal estate must depend upon the accident of their locality at the time of distribution. A debtor to the estate, paying his debt to the French representative of the testator by compulsion of law there, could not, perhaps, be afterwards made answerable for the same debt to the English executor if he came within the jurisdiction of a British court; but it may be doubted whether payment without process would be equally available as a defence; and if it were, a creditor to the estate might determine the destination of the debt, at his option, by selecting the country in which he pays it. Difficult questions might arise upon negotiable instruments, mutual debts, liens, and goods in transitu; but the incidental inconveniences in such cases will be outweighed by the general beneficial operation of the act in favour of the intention; for it may be assumed that the latest will which a testator has allowed to remain in existence contains his last wishes, in whatever place and according to whatever form he may have executed it.

We trust that some effort will be made to induce other countries to enter into treaties for giving to the subjects of each a similar privilege to that which British subjects will, to a limited extent, acquire under Lord Kingsdown's bill.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 11, 1861.

THE power of intervening in suits for divorce à vinculo matrimonii, conferred by the recent statute on the Attorney-General and the Queen's proctor, has been brought into operation, and promises very beneficial results. The original act creating the Divorce Court, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, seems based on the vicious principle, that a suit for divorce à vinculo matrimonii is entirely an affair between the contending parties themselves—that neither third parties nor society have any interest in the success or failure of such suits, or whether they are collusively and improperly prosecuted. This notion is corrected, in part at least, by the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, which enables the Queen's proctor, acting under the instructions of the Attorney-General, and indeed enables all other persons likewise, to intervene in any such case where collusion is suspected; and, in order to give opportunity for this intervention, directs that every decree for such a divorce shall in the first instance be a decree nisi, not to be absolute until after the expiration of such time, not less than three months from the pronouncing thereof, as the Court shall by general or special order from time to time direct.

The first case under this statute recently came before the Court, on which occasion the Judge Ordinary pronounced a very important decision. That was a case of Gray v. Gray, decided on the 17th April, 1861, and of which we give the following report taken from The Times of the next day:—

"The petitioner in this case, Mary Louisa Gray, prayed for a dissolution of her marriage with Richard Thomas Clement Gray, on the ground of adultery coupled with bigamy. The respondent did not appear. The cause was heard by his Lordship on the 17th January last, and a decree nisi was pronounced for the dissolution of the marriage, with costs. On the 20th March the Queen's proctor, by direction of the Attorney-General, applied to the Court, under the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, for leave to intervene. Leave was granted, and the Queen's proctor thereupon filed a plea, and prayed that the petition might be dismissed, and the petitioner or the respondent condemned in the costs.

"Dr. Wambey, on behalf of the petitioner, moved for leave to take the petition off the file.

"The Attorney-General (with whom were Dr. Philimore, Q. C., and Dr. Spinks) said that this being the first case which had been brought before the Court under the new act, he thought it his duty to attend to resist the petitioner's application. It was difficult to express any decided opinion with respect to a novel kind of practice like the present; but, looking to the analogous practice in the Court of Chancery in cases where decrees nisi were to be set aside, the application ought not to be entertained. That technical question, however, was very immaterial. The Queen's proctor, having received information from which he felt it to be his duty to intervene after the decree nisi was pronounced, obtained leave to do so. He then placed the following pleas upon the files of the court:—

"That the said petitioner has been acting in collusion with the respondent Richard Thomas Clement Gray for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, contrary to the justice of the case.

"That divers material facts respecting the conduct of the said petitioner and the respondent have not been brought before the Court.

"That at the time when the said petitioner presented her said petition for dissolution of her marriage, she was, and had been for some years previously, habitually committing adultery with Thomas Kendall, an omnibus proprietor.

"That from the autumn of the year 1850 down to the middle of the year 1852 the said petitioner was in the constant habit of meeting the said Thomas Kendall at the Red Cow Tavern, Dalston, in the county of Middlesex, and of there committing adultery with him.

"That from the time mentioned in the preceding paragraph to the month of December, 1856, the said petitioner lived in divers places in the said neighbourhood, and was there constantly visited by the said Thomas Kendall, and has on divers such occasions committed adultery with the said Thomas Kendall.

"That from December, 1856, to March, 1859, the said petitioner lived and cohabited as his wife with the said Thomas Kendall, at Radnor-terrace, King Henry's-walk, Ball's-pond-road, in the county of Middlesex.

"That from the month of March, 1859, to the present time, the said petitioner has lived and cohabited as his wife with the said Thomas Kendall, at a house situate at Tyssen-terrace, Dalston-lane, Hackney, in the county of Middlesex."

"It was, he submitted, important to the highest interests of justice that parties should not be permitted, after they had proceeded so far as to obtain a decree nisi, to withdraw their case from the further consideration of the Court, and to obliterate all trace of it by removing the petition from the file. The Court and the public had an interest in having the suit finally determined. The Court having been induced to pronounce an improper decree, it was under an obligation to set it aside. It was impossible that the object of the Legislature could be attained if the moment the Attorney-General intervened for the purpose of preventing the highest contempt of court being permitted—namely, the obtaining a decree by an imposition on the Court—the petitioner was allowed to defeat justice by withdrawing his petition. This extraordinary application was made solely in consequence of the intervention of the Attorney-General. He hoped the Court would not accede to it, but would hear the evidence by which the Queen's proctor proposed to prove his allegations, and would then finally determine the case in the ordinary course.

"Dr. Wambey contended that the only object which the Queen's proctor could have in intervening would be fully attained if this application were granted and the petition were withdrawn. He was unable to understand how the public interest could be affected, or how the public morality could be in any way benefited, by an exposure of all the facts tending to prove collusion, if collusion existed. He could not conceive why the petitioner should be debarred from withdrawing the petition.

"The Judge Ordinary: I am of opinion that I ought not to grant this application. I think that the interest of the public is concerned largely in the matter, and that it is important, in the interest of the public and in the interest of morality, if a woman comes forward presenting shamelessly her sham case—a case not founded on truth, but on collusion with her husband—that her conduct should be fully exposed, and that the disgrace which belongs to such a transaction should be thoroughly understood. I think, moreover, that the Attorney-General having directed the Queen's proctor to intervene, under the authority of the statute, it is not competent to the party, after that intervention, to seek to defeat the object of the proceeding taken under the authority of the Legislature, for the purpose of evading the consequences of her misconduct by withdrawing the petition. I think, further, that one consequence of this proceeding, which the statute contemplated, could not be attained if the petitioner were allowed to withdraw her petition. It is in the breast of the Court, if it should think that a case of fraud and collusion has been established, to fix the costs upon the husband, at all events, if not upon the wife. That consequence would be evaded if the party to a collusive suit were to be allowed to withdraw the petition. On all these grounds I shall hear the evidence which the Attorney-General proposes to adduce, and shall let the case proceed to its legitimate determination, in accordance with the directions of the Legislature.

"The Attorney-General asked his Lordship to reserve the question of the costs of the present application.

"The Judge Ordinary: I am not in a condition to deal with that question now. I have nothing before me at present to affect the respondent."

If the principle here laid down is consistently and fearlessly carried out, a tolerably effective check will be placed on collusive suits for divorce, when the collusion is of an active kind. Collusion of a more passive nature, as well as what the statute calls "connivance," are evils more difficult to deal with, for which, we fear, a perfect remedy must ever be a desideratum. And the former of these may be where no original intention of imposing on the court existed in the mind of the respondent. The following case, we are informed, has occurred in practice on one, and perhaps on several, occasions:—A woman presented a petition to the Divorce Court for a divorce à vinculo, in which she charged her husband with various acts of the grossest misconduct, amply sufficient, if true, to entitle her to a divorce. The husband sought his legal adviser, and, in consultation, assured him that all the charges were untrue, and ordered defence to be taken to the suit; but on it being represented to him that the consequence of his successfully defending the suit would be that he would be bound to take his wife back again if she desired it, he said nothing should ever induce him to live with a woman who had accused him, and falsely too, in the manner she had done. He, therefore, resolved to let the cause go undefended, and let his wife take a decree for a divorce, if the Court would give it to her. Whether this conduct amounted to collusion or connivance within the statute may be a question for the Divorce Court; and whether it was justifiable in foro conscientiae we leave to the casuists; but the eye of common sense sees an immense difference between the conduct of a man withholding his defence under such circumstances, and of one conspiring with his wife ab initio to carry a collusive suit through the court with the view of obtaining a divorce, and so rendering its decree "fabula non iudicium."

Since the above was in type, we have observed in the daily papers that in another cause of the same nature in the Divorce Court, the Attorney-General stated that the first time he obtained materials for proving collusion he should indict all the parties to it.

WHAT IS "EAST INDIA STOCK?"

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—It is somewhat singular that notwithstanding all the difficulty which has arisen as to the meaning of "East India Stock," in the 32nd section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, that ambiguous expression has been again used in the General Order of the 1st February, 1861, made in pursuance of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 10, for declaring the funds and securities in which cash under the control of the court may be invested. It seems to be generally considered, that as regards the construction of the former act the question is settled in favour of the old company's stock, by the decision in Re The Colne Valley, &c. Bill (29 L. J., Ch., 33). That decision, however, is far from being conclusive, for the Lord Chancellor said expressly that a trustee who had invested in the New East India Government Loan would be protected by the act; and neither of the Lords Justices expressed a contrary opinion.

But be this as it may, the words in the General Order stand on a different footing; for the main argument for holding that "East India Stock," in the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, could not mean the new loan, was, that there was no such loan in existence at the passing of the act, the first of the existing loans having only been authorised by an act which passed on the same day—an argument which is evidently inapplicable to the construction of the General Order.

It is true, that in The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 307) it seems to have been assumed, both by counsel and the court, that the "East India Stock" in the General Order must mean the old company's stock; but as the point was not raised, that case ought not, I conceive, to be conclusive on the matter; and, for the reasons above indicated, I would submit that the question is still open.

It is one of considerable importance. It has already been pointed out (I think in your columns) that the old company's stock is an improper investment for trust funds, inasmuch as by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 12, that stock is liable to be paid off in 1874, at the rate of 200*l.* for every 100*l.* stock, while the present market price of it is upwards of 220*l.*; and Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in the last-mentioned case, while deciding that he was bound to authorise such an investment, admitted that "considerable damage would result to the capital." Already tenants for life of trust funds are beginning to press their trustees to make such investments, whereby they will obtain improved incomes, at the expense of their children or other persons entitled in remainder.

In the case of The Colne Valley Bill the Lord Chancellor seemed to think, that by "East India Stock," in the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the Legislature might have been supposed to mean both kinds of securities, if the new stock had been then in existence; but we have nothing like a decision to that effect; and what is wanted rather is, that the latter alone should be allowed as an investment.

COUNTY COURT CIRCUIT, No. 34.—Francis Ellis, Esq., of the Home Circuit, has been appointed judge of this circuit, in the room of Edward Cooke, Esq., resigned. Mr. Ellis, who is son of T. F. Ellis, Esq., whose decess he recently recorded, was called to the bar in 1849, and is known to the Profession as contributor to the reports of Ellis Blackburn & Ellis, and Ellis & Ellis, as well as of several cases in Ellis & Blackburn.

Reviews.

Lectures, Elementary and Familiar, on English Law.
By JAMES FRANCILLON, Esq., County Court Judge.
[Butterworths; and Hodges, Smith, & Co., Dublin.
First Series, 1860. Second Series, 1861.]

In the transition state in which the laws of England are at the present time, the want of elementary works is necessarily much felt. We therefore hail the appearance of a work like the above, which comes from a gentleman who may fairly be supposed competent to the task of writing it: Mr. Francillon having now held for many years the responsible position of judge of a county court, and being, we believe, also a chairman of quarter sessions. It must not, however, be supposed that the present Lectures are fitted, or even offered, as a substitute for Blackstone, Stephen, or any of those other treatises which the student first takes in hand; on the contrary, Mr. Francillon distinctly informs us, in his Introduction, that he makes but slight pretensions to be the author of a law book. "These Lectures," he says, "written from materials compiled from various sources, for the use of two junior law students, to whom they are addressed, and in whose progress I take a deep interest, are now published in the hope that they may be useful to other young Englishmen, serving to make them familiar with the laws which the self-governing people of England have formed for themselves. In addition to my desire to render assistance to young professional students, my object is to initiate in the study of law others of our youth, destined many of them as magistrates to administer, some of them as legislators to amend, and all as Englishmen to obey and defend, the laws of their country. With these views, far from attempting a regular treatise, I have selected and endeavoured to explain the more prominent parts of our law, and also those parts which appear to me the most likely to attract and interest young and well-trained minds. Hence," he adds, "it is, that of the many faults which will be perceived in this work, the most conspicuous, if not the most real, is the great fault of being too discursive, too full of digressions. If I can be said to have begun with a plan, I have found it impossible to adhere to it. The temptation has often been irresistible to offer what seemed useful information on interesting points not within my original scheme." Mr. Francillon accordingly does sometimes step out of his way, and occasionally to give good advice to those who are most likely to be his readers. Thus, it is impossible not to approve his strong condemnation of accommodation bills (vol. 1, pp. 50—52); and the following observations respecting the rule of the road will, we think, be found interesting:—"You will smile at my gravely mentioning, as a part of the common law of the land, your old acquaintance, the rhyming rule of the road—'the paradox quite.' I so mention it because it seems to me to have had its origin in a husbandry usage—that of a waggoner to walk on the left of his team as the most convenient side for guiding his horses. Thus, when two waggons meet, each waggoner, walking on the left side of his leading horse, can, by dropping the end of his whip over to the right side of the horse's head, and speaking to it the usual words, bring it and the rest of the team with the waggon towards him. The practice serves to give to the left side of the team and the left side of the road the name of the 'near side,' the right being the off side. So a person driving a carriage, holding the reins in his left hand and the whip in his right, finds it most easy, by means of the reins and whip, to draw to the near side. The usage to pass to the left having become universally prevalent, manifestly to the convenience and safety of everybody, it became a part of the common law, that of two carriages meeting, each shall pass on the near side of the road; and, added to this, there is another usage, that when one carriage, overtaking another, passes it, it must pass it on its off side, going, as it were, round it, as you see every day. There is a corresponding duty on the part of a carriage overtaken by another, that of keeping to the near side of the road, to leave room on the other side for the carriage overtaking it to pass. The same rules are observed in the case of horsemen passing each other or passing carriages."

Mr. Francillon has adopted the following order in these Lectures:—First, he treats of the common law; secondly, of alterations effected in it by statute; and, thirdly, of constitutional law. Whether this is the best arrangement we will not undertake to decide—the subject being one on which much difference of opinion has existed at all times—and shall merely proceed to notice some portions of the work which call for observation.

In his thirty-ninth Lecture, when speaking on the subject of presumptions, Mr. Francillon lays down the following rule, which certainly is not always observed as it should be:—"In nearly every judicial investigation, involving any degree of difficulty, the judge finds his task the easier the more clearly he keeps in view the legal presumption applicable to the facts as they come before him. In a difficult case the presumption may sometimes shift from one side to the other, and the last presumption left un rebutted may be decisive." In the same Lecture he says—"Of the crime of murder, the punishment for which is death, I prefer, to any other definition I have seen, that expressed by the two words: malicious homicide." We are not quite satisfied with this, for it is possible for a person to kill another maliciously without committing any offence whatever; e. g. a man assaults another with intent to murder him, or breaks into his house by night with intent to commit felony: in either case the injured party has a right to stay the aggressor, and, in so doing, might have the utmost possible malice against him. The element of unlawfulness must be introduced into the definition of murder; and accordingly we should prefer defining it "an unlawful slaying, with malice aforethought, express or implied." It is remarkable, that in the same Lecture Mr. Francillon himself defines "manslaughter" as "criminal, though not malicious, homicide."

The important principle that there may be "damnum absque injuriâ" is thus well stated by Mr. Francillon (vol. 2, p. 51):—"In this respect the principles of English law are consistent with the principles declared by moralists and divines. Thus Butler, in his sermons, explains, better than other writers, that mischief caused without injustice is not, and that injustice is, a proper object of resentment, the natural feeling with which men are endowed to lead them to the redress of injuries by lawful means, stopping short of revenge, which is the unlawful excess of resentment. Whenever the law provides a remedy for an injury, it gives a right direction to resentment, and serves to prevent revenge. Whenever it denies a remedy for a damage not caused injuriously, it enforces on the sufferer the duty of not resenting that which is not a proper object of resentment."

Mr. Francillon, we regret to observe, speaks in many places in a very disparaging manner of trial by jury—at least, in civil cases; and although in some others he uses language, apparently at least, inconsistent with this, it is not difficult to see that his bias is pretty strong against it. (See Lectures 40 and 41). We have no desire on the present occasion to discuss the general question with him; but while his work was before us we found that it had been already reviewed in The Morning Post, from which paper we take the following apposite observations on this feature in it:—"Into the much-vexed question of trial by jury the author enters with the feelings of one to whom evidently the necessity of jurymen is by no means apparent. His experience as a county court judge may have possibly led him to form a pardonably exaggerated estimate of the capabilities of a judge to dispose, not merely of questions of law, but of fact. It is, however, doubtful whether a county court supplies a suitable arena for testing the point in dispute. The instances he presents to the reader's notice of the powers possessed by several eminent judges of influencing the minds of juries are far from being convincing proofs that those powers should be made absolute. Indeed, they tend the other way. It is well known that many men, judges as well as others, entertain strong one-sided opinions on matters which are constantly the subjects of dispute. . . . Composed, as juries are, of twelve men taken by chance from the great mass of the community, they necessarily represent the combined effect of so many different ways of thinking. The consequence is, that violent opposing prejudices tend to neutralise each other, and the complex state of mind presented by the united faculties of the twelve jurymen is, to a great extent, unbiased. Those persons who advocate the trial of questions of fact by single judges should also bear in mind, in addition to the prejudices they may entertain, that if an error is once committed by them, it will, when a similar state of things arises, be repeated. Juries constantly err; but when they do so the evil is not perpetuated. After pronouncing their verdict their functions cease, and the chances are incalculable against the same twelve men again finding themselves in a jury-box trying a similar cause. It is otherwise with a judge; he is irremovable, and in the common course of events it must frequently fall to his lot to try cases differing from each other in little more than the names of the parties. His bias on particular subjects would not only be known, but be calculated on; and the scandalous exhibition, hitherto fortunately never witnessed in English courts, would be presented of suitors displaying their ingenuity with a view to secure particular judges to try particular causes." But, as connected with this subject, Mr. Francillon makes an observation which we consider of great importance, and complimentary to his powers of discernment. Of late years it has become usual among many persons to extol the Scotch practice in criminal cases, of allowing a jury to avoid finding the accused either guilty or not guilty, and to declare the charge "not proven." On this Mr. Francillon remarks—"True it is that the Scotch practice is more logical than the English, which forces a jury to say either 'guilty' or 'not guilty,' inasmuch as, in the majority of cases in which the latter verdict is given, the accused person is acquitted, not because he is proved or even thought to be innocent, but because he is not clearly proved to be guilty. In favour of our practice, it may be said that a Scotch jury may escape the necessity of a thorough discussion of the question of guilty or not guilty by too readily adopting a verdict of 'not proven.'"

In the part of this work which treats of constitutional law, the important question respecting parliamentary privilege, which about twenty years ago formed the subject of the celebrated contention between the House of Commons and the Court of Queen's Bench, together with the cases of Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & El. 1) and Howard v. Gossett (10 Q. B. 359), are necessarily introduced. And here we think Mr. Francillon has not correctly stated the law. In his fifty-second Lecture he says—"It would seem reasonable that, if a defamatory speech made by a member of Parliament may be published by him or any other person, much more should it be lawful to publish, by the authority of either House, a report of one of its committees, or a vote of the House itself, though happening to be defamatory. But such was not the law before the year 1840." Now, whether this was or was not the law, was exactly the question in dispute between the House of Commons and the Court of Queen's Bench on that occasion—a question which we conceive remains untouched by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 9, to which Mr. Francillon refers, and which was passed in order to put an end to the unseemly contest. He sets out, indeed, the first three sections of that statute, which create a summary mode of staying the proceedings in actions brought against officers of either House of Parliament for libels published by them under the authority of the House, and provide protection for other persons publishing extracts from such libels; but in quoting the preamble he omits the recital, "that it is expedient that more speedy protection should be afforded to all persons acting under the authority of the Houses of Parliament, or one of them;" and he makes no mention whatever of the 4th section, which is as follows:—"Provided always, and it is hereby expressly declared and enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken, or held or construed, directly or indirectly, by implication or otherwise, to affect the privileges of Parliament in any manner whatsoever."

These are not the only portions of this work which are deserving of approbation, or open to criticism, but we have said enough to convey to the minds of our readers a general notion of its character.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

EASTER TERM, 1861.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. Jacob John Moser, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Swainson, of Lancaster, and Mr. Robert Marshall, of Verulam-buildings, London.

2. John William Bacon Grey, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Powell & Newman, of Newport Pagnell, and Messrs Pattison & Wigg, of Clement's-lane, London.

3. Thomas Goodman, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Clark, of the Sessions House, Old Bailey, London, and Mr. Henry Avory, of the Sessions House, London.

4. John William North, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. Edwin John Hayes, of Wolverhampton, and Messrs. Sharpe, Jackson, & Parker, of Bedford-row, London.

5. Frederic Messiter, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Messiter, of Frome, and Mr. Malim Messiter, of Frome, and Mr. Thomas Henry Smith, of Frederick's-place, Old Jewry, London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Moser, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn, and, as a further mark of distinction, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Grey, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clement's-inn; to Mr. Goodman, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. North, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Messiter, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

Thomas Brevitt, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Duignan & Ebsworth, of Walsall, and Messrs. Eyre & Lawson, of John-street, Bedford-row; Richard Betton Charles Pulsford Foster, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Scarth & Sprott, of Shrewsbury; William Henry Moberly, jun., aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Henry Moberly, of Southampton, and Messrs. Shum & Crossman, of King's-road, Bedford-row; John Price, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. Jacob Strickland, of Bristol, and Mr. Robert Shuttleworth Gregson, of Angel-court, London; William Tilley, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Johnson, of Lancaster, and Mr. William Skilbeck, of Southampton-buildings, London; and John Winttingham, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Babb & Grange, of Grimsby, and Messrs. Hill & Son, of Throgmorton-street, London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates, that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to prizes or certificates of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

Henry William Bleby, B.A., aged twenty-nine, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Armstrong, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Mr. Samuel Rowles Pattison, of Clement's-lane, London; William Alexander Crump, aged thirty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Wilson Nicholson, of Lime-street, London; John Hammett Knott, aged thirty-seven, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Pownall, Son, & Cross, of Staple-inn, London; and Sydney Mayhew, aged twenty-seven, who served his clerkship to Mr. Alfred Mayhew, of Carey-street, and Mr. Henry White, of Southampton-street, Bloomsbury.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 101; of these 90 were passed, and 11 postponed.

By order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, May 9, 1861.

BILLS IN PROGRESS.

TRADE MARKS BILL.

(Brought from the Lords on the 15th March, 1861).

A Bill to amend the Law relating to the fraudulent Marking of Merchandise.

Sect. 1. In the construction of this act the word "person" shall include any person, whether a subject of her Majesty or not, and any body corporate or body of the like nature, or company or society, whether the members thereof be subjects of her Majesty or not, or some of them subjects of her Majesty and some of them not, and whether such body corporate, body of like nature, company, or society, be established or carry on business within her Majesty's dominions or elsewhere, or partly within her Majesty's dominions and partly elsewhere; the expression "trade mark" shall include any name, word, letter, mark, device, figure, sign, seal, stamp, label, or other thing lawfully used by any person to denote any chattel, or (in Scotland) any article of trade, manufacture, or merchandise, to be of the manufacture, workmanship, production, or merchandise of such person; the word

"misdeameanour" shall include crime and offence in Scotland; and the word "court" shall include any sheriff or sheriff substitute in Scotland.

2. Whosoever, with intent to defraud, or to enable another or others to defraud, any person, shall forge or counterfeit, or procure or cause to be forged or counterfeited, any trade mark, or shall make, or procure or cause to be made, any imitation of a trade mark so resembling such trade mark as to be likely to deceive, or shall apply, or procure or cause to be applied, any trade mark, whether the same be a genuine trade mark or not, to any chattel or article, not being the manufacture, workmanship, production, or merchandise denoted or intended to be denoted by such trade mark, or to any case, cover, wrapper, cask, bottle, reel, stopper, or other thing, in, on, or with which any chattel or article shall be intended to be or shall be sold, or uttered or exposed for sale, or for any purpose of trade, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

3. Whosoever, with intent to defraud, or to enable another or others to defraud, any person, shall sell, or utter or expose for sale, or for any purpose of trade, any chattel or article, together with any forged or counterfeited trade mark, or any fraudulent addition to or alteration of a trade mark, or with any imitation of a trade mark so resembling such trade mark as to be likely to deceive, or with any trade mark, whether the same be a genuine trade mark or not, which shall have been applied without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), and whether such trade mark or imitation be in, on, or about such chattel or article, or in, on, or about any case, cover, wrapper, cask, bottle, reel, stopper, or other thing in, on, or with which such chattel or article shall be sold, or uttered or exposed for sale, or for any purpose of trade, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

4. In any indictment under this act with respect to a trade mark, or an imitation of, or addition to, or alteration of a trade mark, it shall be sufficient to describe the same as a trade mark, without further or otherwise describing such trade mark, or setting out a copy or fac-simile thereof.

5. Whosoever, with intent to defraud, or to enable another or others to defraud, any person, shall put, or procure or cause to be put, upon any chattel or article, or upon any case, cover, wrapper, cask, bottle, reel, stopper, label, or other thing in, on, or with which any chattel or article shall be intended to be or shall be sold, or uttered or exposed for sale, or for any purpose of trade, any false indication, statement, or description of the quantity, quality, measure, substance, or material of such chattel or article, or any part thereof, or of the manner or place in or at which, or of the person by whom, such chattel or article was made, manufactured, or produced, or was or is dealt in, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

6. Whosoever, with intent to defraud, or to enable another or others to defraud, any person, shall sell, or utter or expose or keep for sale, or for any purpose of trade, any chattel or article on which, or on any case, cover, wrapper, cask, bottle, reel, stopper, label, or other thing in, on, or with which such chattel or article shall be so sold, or uttered or exposed or kept for sale, or for any purpose of trade, there shall be any false indication, statement, or description of the quantity, quality, measure, substance, or material of such chattel or article, or any part thereof, or of the manner or place in or at which, or of the person by whom, such chattel or article was made, manufactured, produced, or was or is dealt in, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

7. Whosoever, with intent to defraud, or to enable another or others to defraud, any person, shall forge or counterfeit, or procure or cause to be forged or counterfeited, any name, word, letter, initial, cipher, monogram, or other mark whatsoever used to denote any picture, painting, drawing, engraving, lithograph, print, plate, model, sculpture, or other work of art, to be the work, production, or manufacture of any person, whether alive or dead, or shall make, or procure or cause to be made, any imitation of any such name, word, letter, initial, cipher, monogram, or mark, so resembling the same as to be likely to deceive, or shall apply, or procure or cause to be applied, any such name, word, letter, initial, cipher, monogram, or mark, whether the same be genuine or not, to any picture, painting, drawing, engraving, lithograph, print, plate, model, sculpture, or other work of art, not being the work, production, or manufacture of the person or persons denoted, or intended to be denoted, by such word, name, letter, initial, cipher, monogram, or mark, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

8. In any indictment under this act, when it shall be necessary to allege an intent to defraud, or to enable another or others to defraud, it shall be sufficient to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to defraud, or with intent to enable some other person or persons to defraud, without alleging an intent to defraud any particular person, or an intent to enable any particular person or persons to defraud any particular person; and on the trial of any such indictment it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to defraud any particular person, or an intent to enable any particular person to defraud any particular person; but it shall be sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with intent to defraud, or with intent to enable some other person to defraud.

9. Every person found guilty of a misdemeanour under this act shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to suffer such punishment by imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, or by fine, or both, as the court shall award.

10. Nothing in this act contained, nor any proceeding, conviction, or judgment for any act hereby declared to be a misdemeanour, shall affect any remedy which any person aggrieved by such act may be entitled to, either at law or in equity.

COPYRIGHT (WORKS OF ART) BILL.

(MR. MASSEY, THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL, SIR GEORGE LEWIS, AND THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL).

Abstract of a Bill for amending the Law relating to Copyright in Works of the Fine Arts, and for repressing the Commission of Fraud in the Production and Sale of such Works.

Sect. 1. Commencement of act. Acts set forth in the schedule repealed; saving existing copyright; but future remedies to be under this act.

2. Interpretation of—

- (1). "Design," a conception, idea, or composition embodied in any work of fine art:
- (2). "Author," he who embodies his own design in a work of fine art:
- (3). "Picture," every drawing, painting, photograph, or other work (except engraving, as hereinafter explained) which on the flat surface embodies any design, or represents any scene or object by means of any process or material:
- (4). "Work of sculpture," the embodiment of a design on a surface or surfaces not flat, in marble, stone, metal, wood, wax, clay, or any other substance, by all or any of the processes of carving, casting, modelling, or by any other process:
- (5). "Engraving," the embodiment of any design, or the representation of any work of fine art, by any means or process, upon metal, stone, wood, glass, or any other material, whereby copies may be multiplied on flat surfaces:
- (6). "Architectural work," the representation of a design for any edifice or building, or any part thereof, by any picture, plan, section, elevation, or model made by any process or processes:
- (7). "Work of fine art," every picture, work of sculpture, engraving, and architectural work:
- (8). "British dominions," all parts of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, and all the colonies and possessions of the Crown, which now are or hereafter may be acquired.

3. First, as to new and original works, except architectural works. The author of every picture, work of sculpture, and engraving, which shall be made, or for the first time sold or disposed of, after the commencement of this act, and his assigns, shall have the sole and exclusive right of copying, reproducing, and multiplying such work and the design thereof, by any means, of any size, and for any purpose, for the term of the natural life of such author, and thirty years after his death.

Secondly, as to copies. Every person who, after the commencement of this act, shall lawfully make, or cause to be made, any picture, work of sculpture, or engraving from or after any work of fine art, and his assigns, shall have the sole and exclusive right of copying, reproducing, and multiplying such picture, work of sculpture, or engraving, by any means, of any size, and for any purpose, during the term of his natural life, and thirty years after his death.

Thirdly, as to architectural works. The author of every architectural work which shall be made, or for the first time sold or disposed of, after the commencement of this act, and his assigns, shall have the sole and exclusive right of copying, reproducing, and multiplying such work or the design thereof, or any part of such work or the design thereof, if such part be original, by any means, of any size, or for any purpose whatsoever, for the term of his natural life, and thirty years after his death; but when any building shall have been constructed, nothing herein contained shall preclude any person from making any plans, sections, elevations, or models of the same, or any part thereof, and constructing any building therefrom, provided such plans, sections, elevations, or models be made and executed, not from those of the author of the design thereof, but only from the said building.

4. Non-copyright designs may be used although previously copied.

5. Author's name or monogram to be signed on work.

6. The author of every work of fine art which shall have been sold or disposed of before the commencement of this act, or (in case he shall have died within ten years before the passing of this act) his executors or administrators, and his or their assigns, shall, from and after the commencement of this act, but so as not to affect anything done before this act, have copyright in every such work, and in the design thereof, as if such work had been made, or for the first time sold or disposed of, after the commencement of this act; provided he or they obtain the consent of the owner for the time being of such work, and of every repetition of such work or design made by or with the consent of the author or owner of such work.

7. Requirements of the 5th section to be complied with as to past works.

8. Act not to repeal the Ornamental Designs Acts.

9. The author of every work of fine art, and every person who, after the commencement of this act, shall make or cause to be made any picture, work of sculpture, or engraving from or after any work of fine art, whether he be a British subject or not, and his assigns, and although such work shall have been or shall be made, or for the first time sold or disposed of, in any place out of the British dominions, shall acquire copyright therein under the provisions of this act; provided the conditions herein required have been complied with in respect of such work of fine art.

10. Copyright to be personal property. Assignments, consents, licences, &c. to be in writing.

11. Copyright to be assignable by indorsement. Exemption from stamp.

12. If the author of any work of fine art in which there shall be subsisting copyright, after having sold or disposed of such copyright, or if any other person not being the proprietor for the time being of copyright in any work of fine art, shall, without the consent of such proprietor, repeat, copy, colourably imitate, or otherwise multiply for sale, hire, or distribution, or cause or procure to be repeated, copied, colourably imitated, or otherwise multiplied for sale, hire, or distribution, any such work, or the design thereof, or any part of such work or design, or after having received, either verbally or in writing or otherwise, from any source other than the proprietor of such copyright, knowledge that any such repetition, copy, or other imitation of such work or design, or any part thereof respectively, has been unlawfully made, or after having been served with, or had left at his premises, a written notice, signed by such proprietor or his agent, to the same effect, or by any other means knowing, or having reasonable or probable cause to believe, that any such repetition, copy, or other imitation has been unlawfully made, shall import into any part of the British dominions, or sell, publish, let to hire, distribute, or offer for sale, hire, or distribution, or cause or procure to be imported, sold, published, let to hire, distributed, or offered for sale, hire, or distribution, or shall have in his possession, for any or either of these purposes, any repetition, copy, or imitation of the said work, or of the design thereof, or of any part thereof, made without such consent as aforesaid, such person, for every such offence, shall forfeit to the proprietor of the copyright for the time being a sum not exceeding 100*l.*; and all such repetitions, copies, and imitations made without such consent as aforesaid, and all plates, blocks, moulds, dies, negatives, and other things which shall be exclusively applicable for obtaining such copies, shall be forfeited to, and be the property of, the proprietor of the copyright.

13. Forging name or monogram on work of art, or fraudulently uttering such forgery, to be a misdemeanour.

14. No person shall do, or cause to be done, any or either of the following acts; that is to say,

First, no person shall fraudulently sign or otherwise affix, or fraudulently authorise to be signed or otherwise affixed, any name, initials, or monogram upon any work of fine art:

Secondly, no person shall fraudulently sell, publish, or dispose of, or offer for sale or distribution, any work of fine art having thereon the name, initials, or monogram of a person who did not execute or make such work:

Thirdly, during the life of the author of any work of fine art, wherein there shall be no subsisting copyright, no person shall, without the consent of such author, in any manner, upon any engraving made from or after such work of fine art, or upon any repetition of the design thereof, nor upon any print or impression of any such engraving, or upon any repetition of the same, use the name of the author of such work of fine art, for the purpose of representing that such engraving or repetition has been made from or after such work of fine art, nor shall, without his consent, in any manner include or use his name, for any such purpose as aforesaid, in any prospectus or advertisement of any such engraving or repetition as aforesaid; provided that where, at the commencement of this act, there shall be or shall have been copyright in any such engraving as aforesaid, nothing herein shall prevent the proprietor or last proprietor of such copyright, notwithstanding the same may have expired, from making use of such engraving, or from using the name of such author thereon, in the same way as he might have done if this act had not been passed:

Fourthly, no person shall make or cause to be made any copy or colourable imitation of any work of fine art, whether there shall be subsisting copyright therein or not, for the fraudulent purpose of such copy being uttered or disposed of as having been made or executed by the author or maker of the original work from which such copy or imitation shall have been taken:

Fifthly, no person shall fraudulently utter, dispose of, or put off, or cause to be uttered or disposed of, any copy or colourable imitation of any work of fine art, whether there shall be subsisting copyright therein or not, as having been made or executed by the author or maker of the original work from which such copy or imitation shall have been taken:

Sixthly, where the author or maker of an engraving, or any other work of fine art, made either before or after the passing of this act, shall have sold or otherwise parted with the possession of such work, if any alteration shall afterwards be made therein by any other person, by repair, addition, or otherwise, no person shall be at liberty, during the life of the author or maker of such work, without his consent, to make, or knowingly to sell or publish or offer for sale, such work, or any copies of such work, so altered as aforesaid, or of any part thereof, as or for the unaltered work of such author or maker:

Every offender under this section shall, upon conviction, forfeit to every person aggrieved a sum not exceeding 100*l.*, or not exceeding double the full price at which all such copies, engravings, or imitations shall have been sold, published, or offered for sale, publication, or exchange.

15. Recovery of pecuniary penalties and forfeited articles in England and Ireland by action or before two justices; in Scotland by action before the Court of Session, or by summary action before the sheriff; in any other part of the British dominions, by action or suit, or by summary proceeding before any court, judge, justices, or any person having judicial authority.

16. Importation of pirated works prohibited. Application in such cases of Customs Acts.

17. Action for damages for infringement in addition to penalties and forfeiture. Names and monograms to be considered as trade-marks, with cumulative remedy.

18. Notice of objections. At trial no objection not stated in notice to be allowed.

19. Tender of amends, &c.

20. Notice of action (one month). Limitation of actions (three months).

21. Copyright in past sculpture and engravings, notwithstanding omissions of name and date.

DISGAVELLING OF LANDS BILL.

(MR. LYON AND SIR BROOKE BRIDGES).

Abstract of a Bill for the voluntary disgavelling of Hereditaments of Gavelkind Tenure.

Sect. 1. Any person now or hereafter entitled, at law or in equity, in his own right, to the only or the first vested estate of inheritance in, or entitled at law or in equity to appoint or dispose of, for an estate in fee-simple, for his own benefit, any hereditament, corporeal or incorporeal, being of the tenure of gavelkind, may by deed, in the form given in the schedule to this act annexed, or as near thereto as he finds convenient, and inrolled in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery within six months after the day of the date thereof, declare the hereditament to be thenceforth disgavelled, and the same shall thenceforth be for ever discharged of all custom of gavelkind, and all incidents thereof, and holden in free and common socage only.

2. Provided, that every such disgavelling shall be subject and without prejudice to all estates, rights, titles, interests, and powers, if any, at the time of the disgavelling, subsisting in or affecting the hereditament so disgavelled, and not defeasible by the disgaveller.

3. The power of disgavelling created by this act may be exercised not only by one person entitled in severalty, but also by several persons entitled jointly or in common.

4. Provided, that an undivided share of any hereditament shall not be disgavelled under this act, when any other undivided share thereof is not disgavelled under this act.

5. Where, under this act, any hereditament is disgavelled in equity, the corresponding legal estate therein shall thereupon also be disgavelled.

6. This act may for all purposes be cited as the Disgavelling Act, 1861.

LAW OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES BILL.

Abstract of a Bill (as amended in Committee) intitled "An Act to afford Facilities for the better Ascertainment of the Law of Foreign Countries when pleaded in Courts within Her Majesty's Dominions."

The preamble recites the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63.

Sect. 1. Superior courts within her Majesty's dominions may remit a case, with queries, to a court of any foreign state with which her Majesty may have made a convention for that purpose, for ascertainment of the law of such state.

2. Court in which action depends to apply such opinion.

3. Courts in her Majesty's dominions may pronounce opinion on case remitted by foreign court.

4. Interpretation.

MINES TRESPASSES PREVENTION BILL.

Abstract of a Bill for the Discovery and Prevention of Trespasses and Frauds upon Landowners in Mines.

Preamble.

Sect. 1. Short title of act.

2. Interpretation clause.

3. When there is reasonable and probable ground to suspect and believe that the owner of a mine is working beyond the boundaries thereof, an application may be made to a judge, or information laid before a county court judge or justice of the peace, who shall issue order or warrant to search.

4. Form of order or warrant.

5. Persons to whom order or warrant is addressed to permit informant to enter the mine to examine, inspect, and search; to provide the means necessary therefor; to remove obstacles; to furnish gear to lower informant into mine, and means of transit in and about mine: no objection shall be taken to information, order, or warrant; remedy where act improperly put in force.

6. Owner of mine shall keep and produce a plan or map of the workings of the mine.

7. If any person shall put this act in force unless to ascertain whether the mine has been worked beyond its boundaries, &c., he shall be liable to an action of trespass.

8. If any party shall wilfully disobey, &c. such order or warrant, he shall be liable to a penalty of 100*l*.

9. Limitation of actions.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Samuel Brownlow Gray, Esq., to be Attorney-General for the Bermudas, or Somers Islands.

Mr. Charles Edward Pollock has been appointed tubman in the Court of Exchequer, in the place of Mr. R. Ogle.

The select committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider and report on the seven bills for the consolidation and amendment of several parts of the criminal law, which were brought in by the Solicitor-General early in the present session of Parliament (see ante, p. 76), have made their report to the House.

WHARTON'S LAW LEXICON.—Second Edition.

In royal 8vo., 1860, price 12. 5s.,

THE LAW LEXICON; or, DICTIONARY of JURISPRUDENCE; explaining the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several Departments of English Law; including the various Legal Terms used in Commercial Transactions. Together with an Explanatory as well as Literal Translation of the Latin Maxims contained in the Writings of the Ancient and Modern Commentators. By J. S. WHARTON, Esq., M.A., Oxon, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Assisted Clerk's Manual," &c. Second Edition, enlarged.

"The task was one of the utmost difficulty, and, upon the whole, Mr. Wharton has achieved it in a creditable manner. Law students will find it of the utmost utility, for there is scarcely any subject relating to law on which they may not here obtain useful information, or, at all events, a hint as to where to look for it. . . . We must not omit to notice the very large number of legal maxims which the book contains. They are always accompanied by a good translation, and sometimes by illustrations of the manner in which they have been applied. Articled clerks, who have not had the benefit of a complete classical education, will be thankful to Mr. Wharton for the manner in which he has discharged this part of his task."—Solicitors' Journal, Jan. 7, 1860.

"Mr. Wharton did not undertake a superfluous toil when he imposed upon himself the enormous labour of getting up a new Law Dictionary, or, as he prefers to call it, a Law Lexicon. The proof that it was wanted, and that he has succeeded in supplying the want, is found in the fact that a second edition has been called for. In this he has introduced many corrections of errors, unavoidable in so large a labour, and numerous additions suggested by readers, as well as by his own researches; and it may now be pronounced the most complete Law Dictionary we possess, and therefore entitled to preference by all who purpose to add that useful and almost indispensable book of reference to their libraries."—Law Times, Feb. 11, 1860.

"It is with sincere gratification that we call attention to Mr. Wharton's Law Lexicon, and we rejoice to see that it is so far appreciated by the public that a second edition has been called for. In a law dictionary there are two simple objects to be attained, viz. the information and the convenience of the reader; and we think Mr. Wharton has eminently succeeded in uniting these qualities. A series of imperfect treatises on jurisprudence is not the desideratum in a work of this kind, and Mr. Wharton has managed admirably to steer clear of the temptation to dissertation that besets law and lawyers. His subjects are treated with most commendable simplicity, and with a regard to facts alone, that might be more often imitated with advantage. It is difficult to criticise a lexicon; but, after a careful examination, we may say that we have been unable to find a single instance of a legal word or subject that has been omitted. Moreover, there is a vast quantity of information on subjects occupying the boundary between law and the other sciences, and a copious vocabulary of words in the French, Latin, and Saxon languages, while even Jewish and Mohammedan Law has not been forgotten. The method and arrangement are admirable—the instruction of the reader has been the sole object consulted; he is not annoyed by confusing references backward and forward from one subject to another, but, look out what word he will, he may rely upon finding a brief and able exposition of its meaning, and of its bearing upon law. The references are not sown broadcast with that overwhelming hand we are accustomed to see, which savours rather of the writer's claim to erudition than any actual acquaintance with his authorities. Mr. Wharton gives sufficient authorities, and exact references on all important matters. In fine, we think he has succeeded in the object he proposed to himself—that of 'preserving a due medium between a scanty vocabulary of mere words, and a prolix encyclopædia of exhaustive discussions.' We feel sure his book will be useful to the legal profession, and to many beyond it."—The Leader, Feb. 18, 1860.

"Mr. Wharton is entitled to the thanks of the Profession for placing before them a Law Dictionary of portable dimensions, and one that they can refer to with a certainty of finding what they require. . . . By his present performance, which is a monument of patient industry, extensive learning, and unwearied research, he has shewn himself well fitted to fill the office of lexicographer to the Profession. Such an office has been sadly wanted for some time past. Let the Profession be grateful they have secured so efficient an assistant as Mr. Wharton."—Leguleian, No. 39.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 18, 1861.

THE improvement of the science of public international law, otherwise called the law of nations, has long occupied the attention of philosophers, jurists, and statesmen. Several steps for this purpose were taken by the Congress held at Paris in 1856, on the termination of the last European war, on which occasion a declaration respecting maritime law was made by the Powers among whom peace had recently been concluded by the Treaty signed on the 30th March, 1856. That declaration, dated the 16th April, 1856, provides as follows:—

- "1. Privateering is and remains abolished.
  - "2. Neutral flag covers enemy's goods, except contraband of war.
  - "3. Neutral merchandise, except contraband of war, is not seizable under enemy's flag.
  - "4. Blockades, to be obligatory, must be effective—that is to say, maintained by a force sufficient effectually to prevent access to the enemy's coast."
- [“1. La course est, et demeure abolie.
“2. Le pavillon neutre couvre la marchandise ennemie, à l'exception de la contrebande de guerre.
“3. La marchandise neutre, à l'exception de la contrebande de guerre, n'est pas saisissable sous pavillon ennemi.
“4. Les blocus, pour être obligatoires, doivent être effectifs, c'est à dire, maintenus par une force suffisante pour interdire réellement l'accès du littoral de l'ennemi.”]

But as this declaration could bind only the seven Powers who were parties to it—namely, Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey—a clause was inserted that other nations should be invited to adopt it, which some accordingly have done. The United States of America, however, held out, declaring that they could not adopt the article against privateering unless a further condition were introduced, namely, that all private property not contraband of war, even though of an enemy, should be exempted from capture at sea. This notion has also gained adherents in this country, and in the session of Parliament of last year a committee of the House of Commons, appointed to inquire into the state of merchant shipping, reported in its favour. (See 6 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 361-3). Moreover, early in the present session a notice of motion relative to beligerent rights at sea was given in the House of Commons by Mr. Horsfall, the object of which was to raise the above and some other questions. Before, however, this motion came on, the civil war which now unhappily prevails in the United States of America broke out, the effect of which has been to direct unusual attention to this and many other questions of international law.

The dispute is this:—Seven of the United States have declared their intention of seceding from the Union, and forming themselves into a separate confederation. Their right to do so, perhaps under any circumstances, but at all events under those actually existing, is denied by the federal government, and both sides have had recourse to arms to enforce their respective views. Among other hostile measures, the President of the United States has declared the ports of the Confederate States in a state of blockade; and those States have had recourse to the old system of privateers; in answer to which the President has declared that the crews of such privateers will be dealt with as pirates.

In this state of affairs, the time for the discussion of Mr. Horsfall's motion having arrived, one of the leading members of the opposition, Mr. Walpole, strongly put it to the honourable gentleman whether he would persevere in it at a juncture so eminently unseasonable. This was seconded by the Government, which declared that if the motion were persisted in, none of its members would take any part in the discussion. To these remonstrances Mr. Horsfall discreetly submitted, and withholds his motion for the present.

Under these circumstances it became the duty of our Government officially to make public its views in the matter. Having recently declared in Parliament that, while regretting the existence of the war, it was their intention to observe a strict neutrality, and not to interfere between the contending parties, even by offering advice, they have now spoken more distinctly by a royal proclamation which appeared in the last Gazette. It commences as follows:—

"By the Queen.—A Proclamation.

"Victoria R.—Whereas we are happily at peace with all sovereigns, powers, and states:

"And whereas hostilities have unhappily commenced between the Government of the United States of America and certain States styling themselves the Confederate States of America:

"And whereas we, being at peace with the Government of the United States, have declared our royal determination to maintain a strict and impartial neutrality in the contest between the said contending parties:

"We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, to issue this our royal proclamation."

This, it will be observed, carefully avoids, on the one hand, recognising the confederate States as a government either de jure or de facto, and, on the other, committing this country to any judgment as to whether these States are or are not rebels against the federal government. It simply admits that there is war going on in the United States of America—a state of belligerency being a fact which it would be idle to pretend to ignore. The proclamation goes on—

"We do hereby strictly charge and command all our loving subjects to observe a strict neutrality in and during the aforesaid hostilities, and to abstain from violating or contravening either the laws and statutes of the realm in this behalf, or the law of nations in relation thereto, as they will answer to the contrary at their peril."

It then sets out the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. 3, and proceeds as follows:—

"Now, in order that none of our subjects may unlawfully render themselves liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute, we do hereby strictly command that no person or persons whatsoever do commit any act, matter, or thing whatsoever contrary to the provisions of the said statute, upon pain of the several penalties by the said statute imposed, and of our high displeasure.

"And we do hereby further warn all our loving subjects, and all persons whatsoever entitled to our protection, that if any of them shall presume, in contempt of this our royal proclamation, and of our high displeasure, to do any acts, in derogation of their duty as subjects of a neutral sovereign, in the said contest, or in violation or contravention of the law of nations in that behalf; as, for example, and more especially, by entering into the military service of either of the said contending parties as commissioned or non-commissioned officers or soldiers; or by serving as officers, sailors, or marines on board any ship or vessel of war, or transport, of or in the service of either of the said contending parties; or by serving as officers, sailors, or marines on board any privateer bearing letters of marque of or from either of the said contending parties; or by engaging to go or going to any place beyond the seas with intent to enlist or engage in any such service, or by procuring or attempting to procure, within her Majesty's dominions at home or abroad, others to do so; or by fitting out, arming, or equipping any ship or vessel to be employed as a ship of war or privateer or transport by either of the said contending parties; or by breaking or endeavouring to break any blockade lawfully and actually established by or on behalf of either of the said contending parties; or by carrying officers, soldiers, despatches, arms, military stores, or materials, or any article or articles considered and deemed to be contraband of war, according to the law or modern usage of nations, for the use or service of either of the said contending parties; all persons so offending will incur and be liable to the several penalties and penal consequences by the said statute, or by the law of nations, in that behalf imposed or denounced.

"And we do hereby declare that all our subjects and persons entitled to our protection, who may misconduct themselves in the premises, will do so at their peril, and of their own wrong, and that they will in nowise obtain any protection from us against any liabilities or penal consequences, but will, on the contrary, incur our high displeasure by such misconduct.

"Given at our Court at the White Lodge, Richmond Park, this 13th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1861, and in the twenty-fourth year of our reign.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN."

This proclamation seems drawn up with great care. It will be observed that it does not rely on the Foreign Enlistment Act only, but likewise appeals to the law of nations and the common law of the realm, and certainly gives the most ample warning against any interference in the contest that is going on in the United States of America. But we are not without apprehension that, notwithstanding the warning given by this proclamation (or indeed any other that the wit of man could devise), individuals will be found to enter the service of one or other of the contending parties; and that others will do what is far more dangerous to the peace of this country, attempt to break the blockade established by the federal government, and, if captured, shelter themselves under the pretence that it was not effective, claim the protection of the British Government, and do all that in them lies to involve us in a war. Whether a blockade is effective must, indeed, ever be a question of fact: but we trust that our Government, having given the above decisive warning, will—while acting strictly on the declaration of 1856 respecting maritime war (which in its article respecting blockades seems only declaratory of the pre-existing law of nations)—be slow in listening to complaints of supposed outrages against British persons or property, will investigate all such with the utmost calmness and circumspection, and will carry out to the utmost the wise and just resolution enunciated in the proclamation—to leave all those who disobey it to reap the penalties of their inconsiderate, if not unprincipled, conduct.

CONCENTRATION OF THE COURTS.

THE first step has been taken by the Government towards carrying out the report of the commissioners, under the commission issued in 1858, for the purpose of inquiring into the expediency of bringing together into one place or neighbourhood all the superior courts of law and equity, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the Court of Admiralty, and the various offices belonging to the same, and into the means which existed or might be supplied for providing a site or sites, and for erecting suitable buildings for carrying out the above objects; which report will be found at length in the last volume of THE JURIST (part 2, pp. 290 et seq.) A bill has been introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Cowper and Sir William Dunbar, intitled "A Bill to enable the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works to acquire a Site for the Erection of Courts of Justice, and of the various Offices belonging to the same." After reciting the commission and the report of the commissioners, it proposes to incorporate certain commissioners (sect. 2), whom it empowers to purchase certain specified lands (sect. 4), and incorporates with its own provisions those of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, except sects. 16, 17, and 85 of the former, so far as relates to surteties (sect. 6). The limit for the compulsory purchase of land is to be five years (sect. 9); and the commissioners are to be empowered to pull down and remove any buildings on the prescribed lands, and construct thereon such buildings and works, and do all such other things, as may in their opinion be necessary or expedient in order to carry into effect the purposes of the act, or any of them (sect. 10). No purchase to be made without the consent in writing of the Treasury; but it shall not be necessary for any vendor or any purchaser from the commissioners to ascertain that such assent has been given; nor shall the commissioners be bound to produce to any such vendor or purchaser any evidence of such assent; and any such assent may be given either generally, or for any particular purchase or purchases, as to the Commissioners of the Treasury may as aforesaid seem meet (sect. 11). All orders in relation to any money paid into the Bank of England in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery under this act, or the securities in or upon which the same may be invested, or the dividends or interest on such money and securities which under this act the Court of Chancery is empowered to make or give on motion or petition, shall be made or given by the Master of the Rolls or any of the Vice-Chancellors, while sitting at chambers, upon summons, in like manner as in other cases in which proceedings may be so had before the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor, subject nevertheless to any General Rules and Orders which may hereafter be made concerning the practice, proceedings, or business of the court (sect. 13). If any person wilfully obstruct any person acting under the authority of the commissioners in the lawful exercise of the powers vested in them under this act, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence, to be recovered in a summary manner (sect. 14). No instrument by, to, or with the commissioners shall be subject to stamp duty (sect. 15); and every conveyance, assignment, or other deed or instrument, whereby any land by this act authorised to be purchased is conveyed or assigned to the commissioners for the purposes of this act, shall be inrolled amongst the records of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, and entered in the books of the commissioners; and every such conveyance, assignment, or other deed or instrument, when so inrolled, shall, without any other inrolment or acknowledgment thereof, and without any registry thereof, be good and available in law (sect. 16). And, lastly, a copy of the plans of the prescribed lands, signed by one of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall be deposited at the office of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and shall remain at the office, to the end that all persons may, at all reasonable times, on payment of a fee of 1*s.*, have liberty to inspect the same (sect. 17).

The bill contains some other provisions, but the above are the principal.

Rebels.

Suggestions on the Copyright (Works of Art) Bill, now pending in the House of Commons. By D. ROBERTON BLAINE, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Laws of Artistic Copyright, and their Defects." 8vo., pp. 25. [Hardwicke.]

THE bill now in the House of Commons has been founded on the recommendations of the committee appointed by the Society of Arts in 1857 to inquire on the subject of artistic copyright. Mr. Blaine was a member of that committee, and was, with some other members, in a minority in favour of registration as a condition precedent to copyright. The report of the committee, with Mr. Blaine's protest, will be found in THE JURIST (vol. 4, N. S., part 2, p. 168). Mr. Blaine's preliminary report on the legal bearings of the subject is set forth in the same volume at p. 86.

The objections of the majority of the committee to the condition of registration were substantially these—that it would impose on an artist the burthen of sending to London for registration every work tendered for exhibition, and every sketch in his portfolio; that it would make it impossible to grant a copyright in existing works; that it would encourage piracies and frauds in case of any slip in the registry; that the purchaser of a work of art is more interested in the copyright than the artist; and that artists are not men of business. The futility, not to say foolishness, of these objections is sufficiently obvious; and we quote the following observations from Mr. Blaine's pamphlet, not so much in answer to the report of the Society of Arts' committee, as for the purpose of shewing the great importance, or rather the absolute necessity, of making registration a condition of copyright in works of art:—

"For purposes of evidence the register is invaluable in cases which arise either as to the originality of the design, the proprietorship, or the piracy of the work.

"Now, with reference to the advantages of registration of designs for works of fine art, suppose the case of an artist selling his picture, and reserving to himself the copyright. The work is pirated. He brings his action for damages. To prove his case, the first step will be to shew what his picture is that he alleges has been pirated. As the bill is now framed, this must be done by the best evidence—that is, either by producing the picture, or, after satisfactorily accounting for its non-production, giving secondary evidence of it. The delay, expense, danger, and perhaps impossibility of thus proving the plaintiff's case would often be such as to render the copyright valueless to the artist.

"Take another case. Suppose A. signs, and then sells, his picture to B. without the copyright. Years elapse. A. dies, and the picture comes to the hands of C. without any signature upon it, and without, perchance, his being able to ascertain who painted it. C. engraves the picture, and A.'s executors sue him for piracy of the design. According to the present bill, the foundation of the action would depend on proving that the picture was signed by A. as required by the statute. How is this to be done? The fact may only have been known to A. and B. The former is dead, and the latter may have a strong interest in denying that the picture ever was signed.

"With a system of registration such difficulties of proof might be entirely obviated. Under the Ornamental Designs Act the registrar's certificate is declared, 'in the absence of evidence to the contrary,' to be sufficient proof of the originality of the design and all the other facts requisite to establish the original proprietor's case, except, of course, the piracy complained of.

"A department for the registration of works of fine art might easily be added to the Useful and Ornamental Designs Office, the staff of which would doubtless be found amply sufficient for the additional duties thus imposed. The fees on registration would also prove a source of revenue in aid of the expenses of that office," (p. 13).

"As the bill stands, the condition imposed upon a foreign artist is the signing his name or monogram upon his work. Suppose it becomes erased, or that the author is not generally known, without registration how is the existence of any copyright in the work to be ascertained? And, especially, how are the interests of the British public to be protected in ascertaining the termination of such copyright?

"Under sect. 10, it also seems very desirable, considering the extensive and various descriptions of copyright proposed to be given to the authors of new and original works, that every first assignment of the copyright, or license to use it, should be registered. Without such protection, a careless or unprincipled proprietor of copyright might assign it, or grant a license for the same application of the design to more than one person, thus occasioning much mischief, loss, and inconvenience.

"As to sect. 12, this highly penal enactment against copying or selling a copy of a copyright work without the consent of the proprietor of such right seems unjust, in the absence of a proper system of registration, such as that established under the Useful and Ornamental Designs Act. As the bill stands, suppose the case of A. buying a picture at a public sale, from which the author's signature has been obliterated, either designedly or by accident. Finding no signature upon the work, A. concludes the author never intended to claim copyright in it. A. therefore engraves the picture.

"In the absence of a system of registration, would it be just to make either A. or the auctioneer liable for penalties under this section?

"To some extent the same observations also seem to apply to sect. 16," (p. 24).

The following suggestions are worthy of attention:—

"Assume that the author signs his sketches and studies for a picture, or any of them, and also his finished work; in respect of which would the copyright exist? In such a case surely it ought to be only in the finished work, verified and identified by registration. This should be accompanied by a provision in the bill, that the author, either before or after having sold his registered work, or the copyright therein, should be at liberty to sell unfinished sketches and studies for such work, without prejudice to the copyright therein, and that the unlawful copying of such sketches, &c. should be deemed a piracy of the copyright in the finished work, and the design thereof, or of any part of such design.

"As the bill stands, assuming an artist sells all his copyright in a picture, and makes no special contract that he shall be at liberty to sell his sketches, his doing so would be an act of piracy of the copyright he has sold, and thus he would be deprived of the pecuniary advantage of a considerable portion of his labour, the full benefit whereof ought to be secured to him," (p. 19).

"Another serious defect in the bill, in its present form, is, that it makes no provision for those cases in which the employer is justly entitled to be deemed the proprietor of the copyright, instead of the artist, by reason of the latter having been employed to execute a particular work," (p. 20).

"As to portraits, pictures which artists know are commissioned for the purpose of being engraved, engravings of all kinds, and many most costly works, the designs for which are commissioned by silversmiths and others, it is especially of importance that the employer should be deemed the proprietor of the copyright," (p. 21).

"It also seems desirable by the present bill to make some provision as to the copyright in woodcuts and other illustrations of literary works. Talfourd's Copyright Amendment Act is silent on the subject of such engravings. In one case, decided in Chancery, it was held that they formed part of the book in which they appeared; but the law upon the subject cannot be considered as settled. How will the bookseller's copyright in such works be affected by the present bill; also the proprietors of illustrated newspapers and other periodicals; and what is the term of copyright which the authors of such illustrations or their employers are to have, whether the illustrations are published with letter-press or separately? It seems to be very desirable to decide these questions by adequate legislation upon the present occasion, instead of leaving them to be determined by litigation, the expense of which often deters persons from vindicating their rights," (p. 23).

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society was held at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 13th instant, O. Clark, Esq., in the chair, when a paper was read by J. Westlake, Esq., intitled "The Local Law of Guardianships." A discussion ensued, in which the Chairman, J. F. Macqueen, Esq., Q. C., and other gentlemen took part.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed William Pryce Yearsley, Gent., of Welchpool, Montgomeryshire, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Montgomery.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES BILL.

(MR. HENRY BRINSLEY SHERIDAN AND MR. BAZLEY).

Abstract of a Bill to enable Cities, Towns, and Boroughs of Twenty-five Thousand Inhabitants and upwards to facilitate the Appointment of Stipendiary Magistrates.

Preamble.

Sect. 1. Short title of act.

2. Interpretation clause.

3. Board of health, local board, or inhabitants may convene meeting to consider the expediency of appointing justices. Meeting to be convened by notice. Seven days' notice of meeting to be given.

4. If resolution carried by majority, petition to be presented to her Majesty, praying the appointment of justice, and transmitted to Secretary of State. Her Majesty may appoint stipendiary justices.

5. Justice may act as a justice of the peace with or without other justices, but must not act out of the limits, except in certain cases. Justice not to be a member of the House of Commons.

6. The limits within which justice may reside, his attendances, and places of meetings.

7. Salary of stipendiary justice, and mode of payment.

8. Power to justice to appoint his clerk, being an attorney-at-law. Clerks disqualified from acting as attorneys in certain cases. Fees to be taken that are taken by clerk to county justices. Power to award costs.

9. Clerk to receive and keep an account of fees. Fees received under the act to form one general fund. Quarter Sessions to appoint a treasurer, who shall give security. Application of fee fund.

10. Accounts to be kept balanced and audited. Abstract of accounts, audited and certified, to be transmitted to the clerk of the peace, and to be open to inspection. Penalty.

11. Constables authorised to take recognisances in certain cases without fee or reward.

12. Justices at general sessions may make rate for payment of stipendiary justice. Mode of ascertaining value of rateable property. Powers of act relating to county rates applied to this act. Persons levying county rates to levy and collect rates. Penalties applicable to rate to be carried to the account of the general fee fund: payable to her Majesty, shall be paid to the county treasurer, in aid of the county rate. Penalties under customs, excise, or revenue.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 25, 1861.

It has been laid down in courts of equity as a general rule, which has been in almost all cases hitherto very strictly adhered to, that a trustee shall have no allowance for his care or trouble in the administration of his trust; or, in other words, that a trustee shall not profit by his trust. The reason given for the rule by Lord Talbot in Robinson v. Pett (3 P. Wms. 249) is, “that on these pretences” (i. e. charges for care or trouble), “if allowed, the trust estate might be loaded, and rendered of little value.” This reason seems to us to be consistent with sound sense and good policy.

Hence it has been determined, that where a solicitor is a trustee, he will not, on the taking of the trust accounts, be allowed for professional charges, or charges for loss of time, or other emoluments, but will only be allowed for such charges and expenses as have actually been paid by him out of pocket as shall be found to be properly incurred by him. (New v. Jones, 1 Hall & T. 634; Hamilton v. Wright, 9 Cl. & Fin. 111).

In the important case of Moore v. Frowd (3 My. & C. 45), before Lord Cottenham, it was indeed attempted, upon the authority of the unreported case of Daniel v. Goldson (before the Vice-Chancellor of England in March, 1833), to get an allowance for a trustee of professional charges, although in the case of factor or agent (Scattergood v. Harrison, Mos. 128; Sheriff v. Aze, 4 Russ. 33) similar charges had been refused. Lord Cottenham, however, upon the authority of New v. Jones, refused to make the allowance; and with reference to the reason of the rule, and the application of it to the particular case before him, his Lordship said, “It is not because the trust estate is in any particular case charged with more than it might otherwise have to bear, but that the principle, if allowed, would lead to such consequences in general. In the case of the factor or agent, if the executors had employed other persons in those capacities, they would probably have been allowed the expenses; but if they are to perform those duties themselves, and to charge a profit upon such employments, what protection can the cestui que trust have against extravagant charges? Do not these reasons apply to the case of solicitors? Does not this very case strongly exemplify the danger, and illustrate the merit of the rule which would avert it?”

The rule admits of an exception where the testator or creator of the trust expressly authorises the trustee to retain his professional costs, shewing thereby that he would rather run the risk of abuse by uniting the two characters, and pay the solicitor his costs, than lose his services as trustee. But where the creator of the trust, and his trustee, being a solicitor, by contract, make a rule for themselves, and agree that the trustee shall have some benefit beyond that which without such contract the law would allow, the agreement must be distinct, and in its terms explain to the client the effect of the arrangement; and the more particularly when the solicitor for the client, becoming himself a trustee, has an interest personal to himself, adverse to that of the client. (Per Lord Cottenham, C., in Moore v. Frowd, 3 My. & C. 48).

An attempt was made to charge for professional business done by the firm of which one of the trustees was a member, but it was very rightly held that the rule was applicable, and that the charge could not be made, even when the business was not done by the trustee, he being incapable from ill-health, but the whole was done by his partner. See Christophers v. White (10 Beav. 525), where Lord Langdale, M. R., said, “The business was done for the profit of the trustee as partner, and is the same as if two partners divide their business, one attending to the law department and the other to the equity, in which case each acts for the profit of the other. Would this Court allow a trustee to say to his partner, 'You shall act as solicitor, and earn all the profit you can for the concern?' I think that could not be maintained*."

In the recent case of Clack v. Carlon (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 441; 9 Weekly Rep. 568) an attempt to establish an exception to the rule has been successful. There it appears that the defendant Mr. Carlon, of the firm of Carlon & Haynes, solicitors, was appointed a trustee for the purpose of carrying out certain arrangements for the benefit of the creditors of a deceased lady, contained in a trust deed dated the 1st January, 1857. A suit was instituted by some of the creditors to carry into effect the trusts of the deed, to remove Carlon from his trust, and to obtain other relief. By the decree made at the hearing, in December, 1860, the bill was dismissed, with costs, as against the defendants, but certain accounts and inquiries were directed as to the monies received by Carlon as trustee, and as to the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by him in recovering the funds mentioned in the trust deed, beyond his costs in the cause. In proceeding with the accounts and inquiries, the plaintiff's solicitor objected to the allowance of any costs to Carlon beyond the amount actually paid out of pocket. A further question arose as to the costs claimed by Carlon's partner, Mr. Haynes, in the conduct of the trust business and the suit. It appeared that in August, 1856, about the time the trust deed was prepared, an agreement was made between them that Haynes should, in all matters connected with the trust, act as Carlon's solicitor, and that he alone should be entitled to receive for his own benefit any costs and charges payable for business done in reference to the trust. Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., held that Mr. Haynes, from the time when he was acting under the agreement with his partner, should be allowed his full costs. His Honor observed that he saw no ground for saying that a solicitor trustee might not make an arrangement with his partner to treat him as a stranger in the management of the particular business. If the partner did not take all the profit to himself, but made an arrangement to share it with the trustee, then there would be a fraud; but in this case there was no reason to suppose that any irregularity existed. He knew no reason why two firms might not come to a mutual arrangement, each to transact the trust business of the other. In the same way two members of the same firm might enter into such a bargain.

With great deference to the learned Vice-Chancellor, we think that this decision cannot be supported, upon a fair consideration either of the principle of the rule, or of the authorities upon which it is supported; and if the exception to the rule which the Vice-Chancellor has created be hereafter supported, the rule itself may easily, and at the same time we must add very ingeniously, be evaded.

It is true, that in the case before the Vice-Chancellor, and in many others, the charges made professionally by a solicitor trustee, or by a person being his partner, on his partner, in all business save that particular trust business, may be but just and proper, and only what would have been made if a stranger had been employed as solicitor to transact the legal business of the trust, and his mode of doing it, and charging for it, were carefully watched by the trustee employing him. The application, however, of the rule, it must always be remembered, does not depend upon the conduct of the trustee in each particular case, but upon the consequences which would generally ensue if a trustee or his partner were entitled to make charges professionally for trust business. Now, when a solicitor is trustee, and he or his firm make charges for professional business done for the trust, it is clear that the interests and duties of the trustee solicitor are conflicting. As solicitor, it is his interest to do as much professional business for the trust, and charge as highly for it, as he possibly can. His duty as trustee would or ought to lead him in an opposite direction; it would cause him to avoid all expenditure in legal proceedings, save such as were absolutely necessary, and it would permit only such charges to be made for them as were reasonable and proper.

Although in some particular cases a solicitor trustee may be found so watchful of his own conduct as to prevent himself from gaining any advantage for himself which he would not allow another person to take, the wisdom of the rule which prevents him from being subjected to such temptation is apparent.

Now, will not the case decided by the Vice-Chancellor lead to an evasion of the rule? Suppose two solicitors in partnership, A. B. and C. D.; they are each of them made trustees (probably on their own advice) by numerous clients. The rule forbids each of them from making professional charges; but they enter into an arrangement of this kind: A. B. is to do all the professional business of C. D.'s trusts; C. D. is to do all that of A. B.'s trusts; but the firm is to derive no profit from the transaction of such business. Now, let any person consider such an arrangement, even for a moment, and say whether it does not come within the principle of the rule; and whether, if allowed to stand, it would not lead to all those evils which the rule was established to prevent? Is it probable, under such an arrangement, that either of the parties to it would act as an effectual check upon the other? Is it not, on the other hand, more than probable that there would be, not certainly an express agreement, but a sort of tacit understanding, that each of the parties should have his own way in whatever related to the professional business of his partner's trusts, and the charges in respect of it?

But the greatest objection to the exception to the rule allowed by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., is the difficulty of getting at the real agreement between the parties, which apparently may forbid any division of profits, although by some subsequent arrangement or understanding such division may be made.

* See also Collins v. Carey (3 Beav. 129) and Lyon v. Baker (5 De G. & S. 622).

But whether that be the case or not, we cannot but come to the conclusion that the decision is unsupported by authority and erroneous in principle, and that it furnishes the means of evading or acting in fraud of a most wholesome rule of equity, and will have a tendency to induce attorneys, for their own profit, to traffic in trusts.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

In re EDWIN JAMES.

A petition for private arrangement has been filed by Mr. Edwin J. James, one of her Majesty's counsel, under the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict., commonly called "The Gentleman's Act." Mr. Edwin James did not personally attend the court, the signature only of the petitioner being requisite. In a few days the creditors of the learned gentleman will receive formal notice of the proceedings. It is believed that the debts and liabilities of the petitioner will represent an aggregate of very nearly 100,000*l*.

The case goes to the court of Mr. Commissioner Evans. The solicitors conducting the proceedings are Messrs. Lewis & Lewis, of Ely-place, Holborn.—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 1, 1861.

THE select committee appointed by the House of Commons to examine and report on the seven bills introduced by the Solicitor-General for the consolidation and amendment of some of the most important parts of the statutable criminal law—namely, "offences against the person," "larceny and similar offences," "forgery," "malicious injuries to property," "coinage offences," "accessories and abettors," and for repealing various criminal statutes relative to the above—have made a report of their proceedings, and returned the bills as amended by them. Both will repay attentive perusal.

The committee originally consisted of thirty members—the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Sir George Lewis, the Lord Advocate, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Sir Hugh Cairns, Mr. Serjeant Kinglake, and Messrs. Whiteside, G. Mure, Massey, Henley, Selwyn, Walpole, George, Hardy, Roebuck, Edwin James, Butt, Macaulay, Mellor, Bovill, Cobbett, Collier, Locke, Hadfield, M'Mahon, Ewart, Digby Seymour, Denman, and Ayrton—to which Mr. Macdonogh was afterwards added. The committee had eight meetings, the two first of which were only preliminary, to elect their chairman (the Solicitor-General), and deliberate on the course of their proceedings; the next three were taken up with the discussion of the "Offences against the Person Bill," the sixth and part of the seventh with the "Larceny, &c. Bill;" the residue of the seventh and a portion of the eighth with the "Malicious Injuries to Property Bill;" and the residue of the eighth to the four remaining bills, namely, the "Forgery Bill," the "Coinage Offences Bill," the "Accessories and Abettors Bill," and the "Criminal Statutes Repeal Bill." At the first of these meetings fourteen members attended; at the second, eight; at the third, thirteen; at the fourth, seventeen; at the fifth, seventeen; at the sixth, eleven; at the seventh, nine; and at the eighth, ten. Six of the members named on the committee did not attend at all—Sir F. Kelly, Sir H. Cairns, Mr. Collier, Mr. Massey, Mr. E. James, and Mr. Cobbett; the Attorney-General and Sir G. Lewis attended once each; the other members with more or less regularity; and the Solicitor-General, as befitted the author of the bills, and chairman of the committee, attended throughout.

We shall now proceed to direct attention to a few of the most remarkable features of these bills as amended by the committee. In the first place, the punishment of death is retained for murder, but abolished in all other statutable offences against the person, as well as in several other offences; and the offences of forging the great or privy seal, the sign-manual, or privy signet, &c., which at present are high treason, are reduced to felony. The grave offences of administering poison with intent to murder, or wounding with like intent; of setting fire to a dwelling-house, any person being therein; and of exhibiting false signals with intent to bring a ship into danger; are to be no longer capital; but punishable by "penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years," or imprisonment "for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement;" and in the two latter cases, "if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping."

It must not be supposed, however, that the consolidation effected by these bills is in all respects complete. Thus we do not find in them any repeal of the 12 Geo. 3, c. 24, s. 1, which renders it a capital felony to set fire to, or destroy, ships of war, arsenals, dockyards, &c. Perhaps this subject may have been purposely omitted by the framers of these bills, on the ground that the above are rather offences against the State than injurious to person or property. In truth, they may be looked at in either light, for although the injury they inflict on the persons or things injured is obvious enough, we have little doubt that under certain circumstances they might be laid as overt acts of treason. In any event, they are at all times offences of a most serious kind, from which removing the punishment of death seems no improvement in our law.

A great alteration has been effected in our criminal law since the consolidation of it by Sir Robert Peel in 1827-29, by the abolition of the punishment of transportation, which is now replaced by penal servitude, on which is grafted the power of the Government to grant tickets of leave to persons sentenced to it: and in the present bills we accordingly find the punishments for felony to be penal servitude, imprisonment, whipping, and solitary confinement. We much wonder, however, whether the framers of these bills, when they introduced them into Parliament, and the committee when they amended and returned them to the House, had present to their minds the insight gained by society into the working of the convict system, as brought to light by the recent outbreaks or revolts of the convicts at Chatham and elsewhere: and also whether they considered the general subject of tickets of leave, including the facts, that to convicts in general a remission of a large portion of their sentence is granted systematically, and by virtue of a settled rule; and that there is established among them a system of rewards for good conduct, which sometimes enables a convict, whose time of servitude has expired, to leave his prison with a considerable sum of money in his pocket. (See ante, pp. 143, 144.) If they did not take these matters into their consideration, they have ill discharged their duty; if they did, we would in all seriousness ask if they really think that the grave, some of them diabolical, offences which we have mentioned above, are adequately punished by the sentences the bills provide for them.

Modern legislation, for some reason which, we confess, we do not very clearly comprehend, is chary in inflicting the punishment of solitary confinement. The present bills make no alteration in this respect; it may still be resorted to, but not for more than one month at a time, or more than three months in each year.

These bills introduce one alteration which was loudly called for. By the existing law the punishment of being once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped may be inflicted for many offences; but, from returns published last year, the mode of carrying this punishment into effect varies in different prisons, so as to render it one of the most uncertain characters. The instrument of punishment not being defined by law, in some places a cat-of-nine-tails is used, in others a birch rod, &c. (See 6 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 294.) The present bills contain provisions, that "whenever whipping may be awarded for any indictable offence, &c., the court may sentence the offender to be once privately whipped; and the number of strokes, and the instrument with which they shall be inflicted, shall be specified by the court in the sentence." These clauses were not in the bills when brought into the House, but were proposed in committee by Sir G. Lewis, and carried unanimously.

COPYRIGHT IN A REPLICA

A QUESTION, more curious in a legal point of view than important to the interests of literature, was discussed in the case of Reade v. Lacy (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 463). The plaintiff, about the year 1832, had composed a drama called "Gold," of which an acting edition was, with his permission, published by the defendant Lacy. Afterwards the plaintiff composed a novel intitled "It is never too late to mend," into which he introduced the incidents and a large portion of the dialogue of "Gold." This was published in 1856. Hazlewood, the other defendant, not knowing the existence of "Gold," concocted a drama, which he intitled "Never too late to mend," founded on the plaintiff's novel, and containing many passages which were in the plaintiff's novel, and also in his drama of "Gold." Lacy published Hazlewood's drama. The plaintiff, suing as proprietor of the copyright in each of his works, obtained an injunction against the publication of any passages contained in "Gold," but was left to establish his title at law in respect of passages taken from his novel, and not contained in his play.

The defence was founded mainly on the absence of the "animus furandi"—an expression used by Lord Ellenborough in the case of Cary v. Kennedy (4 Esp. 167), to which too much importance has been attached, and against which may be set a dictum by the same judge in Roworth v. Wilkes (1 Camp. 94), that "the intention to pirate is not necessary in an action of this sort" (i. e. an action for damages, and not for penalties). The defendant Hazlewood insisted that he had a right to connect a play out of the plaintiff's novel; and Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., declined to express an opinion as to that, but he said that ignorance would not justify the infringement of a right in one case more than another, and to allow such a justification would give occasion for fraud and perjury. With respect to the defendant Lacy, his Honor observed that "he did know about the play of 'Gold.' He must have known that he was reprinting a thing which belonged to Mr. Reade, and which could not possibly be touched. The hardship, therefore, upon him is none—he must clearly have known it." We do not see the way to this conclusion. A publisher is not expected to read the works which he publishes; and there was nothing in the titles of Mr. Reade's play and novel which could suggest a community of subject.

The question actually decided in Reade v. Lacy is not very important as the law of copyright stands; it could scarcely arise, except with reference to that trashy kind of literature which would probably grow with equal rankness under protection and without it. But if the proposed extension of copyright in works of art becomes law, the case of Reade v. Lacy will probably be frequently cited as an authority for the decision of cases which may be illustrated by reference to the existing law of literary copyright. Suppose that Mr. Reade had sold the copyright in his novel before the commission of the act complained of, and that the proprietor of the copyright refused to join in an application for an injunction, could Mr. Reade alone obtain an injunction against a defendant credibly asserting that he had taken nothing from the play, but all from the novel? Or suppose that the defendant himself were the proprietor of the copyright in the novel. We conceive that in that case the injunction must be refused. If that be so, the question suggested on behalf of the defendant in Read v. Lacy, whether the publication of a play concocted from a novel is or can be an infringement of the copyright in the novel, did arise, and was virtually decided, in that case; for if the novel per se would be public property for the purpose of making plays, the exercise of that right could not be restrained on the ground of an accidental coincidence in the result with something which could not be directly copied. But there seems to be no doubt that the question of piracy or no piracy, in the case of a drama taken from a novel, is to be determined, like any other question of literary piracy, by comparing the two works, and considering the object and effect of the imitation. There is no literary copyright in the conception or plan of a book; piracy consists in an actual copying of the substance of the work. A play, embodying the plot and characters of a novel, is not, therefore, a piracy; it may be a piracy if it substantially copies the language to any considerable extent. The very different question, whether the performance of a drama founded on a novel is a breach of the author's copyright, has lately been properly and conclusively answered in the negative.

Correspondence.

SIR.—Some years ago we had a Chancellor whose intimate acquaintance with the practice of his court, and profound knowledge of the principles of law and equity, gave weight to his decisions, and secured the respect of the Profession for his authority. Quantum mutata tempora! Is it because some of his successors are jealous of a reputation to which they have not attained, that they have so dealt with a pet institution of his (one of a questionable character, but which he no doubt introduced and treated as a remedy, and not as a means, for an abuse) as to fix upon it the stigma of a job?

The establishment of the six conveyancers of the Court of Chancery was nothing less than a "patent of monopoly" for a particular class of professional business. If a similar attempt had been made to abstract a lucrative portion of the business of an advocate from the general competition of the Bar, and to appropriate it to half a dozen nominees of the court, the measure certainly would not have passed sub silentio. Indeed, the hardy propounder of it would, I venture to say, have brought Westminster Hall down about his ears. But the voice of the conveyancer is a small still one, not audible to the public, and therefore not regarded by some Chancellors. The only pretext for the measure in question was, that it enabled the judge to select for his quasi assessors in matters of detail connected with the administration of conveyancing law, men in whom, from their long experience, and their high reputation as real property lawyers, not only the Court, but the Profession generally, could place confidence. This, indeed, was the only reasonable ground on which the solicitor could be arbitrarily prevented from choosing his own conveyancing counsel.

How has this principle been observed in a recent appointment? If the case provokes any remarks which may appear invidious as regards the appointee, he must console himself with the reflection that he only incurs the common fate of a favourite. But it is known to those who by accident know anything at all of this new "one of the six," that though not nominally, he was still virtually, in statu pupillari. Why should I, who desire to avail myself of the ability and experience of an eminent conveyancer of long standing, be compelled to resort to an apprentice de la ley? Is this to be the result of a system which was avowedly established for an object the very opposite? Is an ostensible legal reform, harsh as it was, to be made the inauguration of a régime of snug little "family compacts?"

In fact, this proceeding is not only an insult to an honourable branch of the Profession, but a virtual breach of the very legislative enactment which it hypocritically professes to carry out. Is there to be no censor in these matters? Is indifference or "respect of persons" to keep our lips dumb? I venture to suggest that it is the province of an influential organ of the Profession like THE JURIST to take proper note of such occurrences. Self-compacency is very deaf and callous; but one who is ever trimming his sails to catch the "popularis aura" could only have committed such a faux pas as this because he thought it "a very little one," too insignificant to attract public notice. Eminent as he has been in the walks of Nisi Prius, he does not possess those qualifications in a court of equity or conscience which should enable him to appreciate the evil attendant upon a job (apparently to him, but not really, small) perpetrated by one in his high place.

Of those who look to you for some notice of cases in the Profession like this, I am,
May 27, 1861.

[There is a proverb which in substance recommends the giving of his due to every one, especially to him who has most need of such allowance; and in deference to it our correspondent should not have omitted to credit the Lord Chancellor with his appointment to the vacancy left by the death of Mr. Jarman—an appointment made, ostentatiously of course, but still made upon the recommendation of those most competent to advise. Of the appointment now in question it is sufficient to observe, without implying any disparagement of the fortunate appointee, that it is obviously a job. The retiring counsel was the paid commissioner, his successor the secretary, of the Statute-law Commission, which has been kicked out of existence with contempt and derision on account of its imbecility. Except by his connexion with that commission, and his presumed complicity in Lord Cranworth's foolish statute, we are not aware that the gentleman in question is generally known to the Profession. We have the greatest respect for his intentions, and whatever we may think of him as an amender of the law, we do not suggest a doubt of his abilities in the practice of conveyancing; but we are quite sure that, even setting modesty aside, he himself would be the first to disclaim any title to rank among the six most eminent conveyancers of the day. The claim of Mr. Jarman's successor was not founded on his eminence as a practising conveyancer, but on his distinguished merit as a writer on the subject with which the conveyancing counsel of the court are expected to be most conversant.]

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 27th May, W. T. S. Daniel, Esq., Q. C., in the chair; when a paper was read by Mr. Edward Webster, intitled "On Promotion at the English Bar: its Effects on the Barrister, the Crown, and the Suitor." The chairman, Mr. Sidney Smith, and Mr. Worsley addressed the meeting on the subject of the paper.

Reviews.

An Elementary View of the Proceedings in an Action at Law. By JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., late of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Author of "Leading Cases," "A Compendium of Mercantile Law," &c. Seventh Edition, adapted to the present Practice, by SAMUEL PRENTICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Editor of "Chitty's Archbold's Practice."

[V. & R. Stevens; H. Sweet; and W. Maxwell. 1860.]

An Action at Law; being an Outline of the Jurisdiction of the Superior Courts of Common Law, with an Elementary View of the Proceedings in Actions therein. By ROBERT MALCOLM KERR, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, now Judge of the Sheriffs' Court of the City of London. Third Edition, prepared for the press by BASSETT SMITH, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[London, Butterworths: Dublin, Hodges & Co. 1861.]

THESE are fresh editions of two elementary treatises, on both of which a favourable judgment has been pronounced by the Profession, the first having attained its seventh, and the second its third edition. The similarity of title in the two works is, however, much to be regretted. This was objectionable enough in former editions, but the mischief is now aggravated by a coincidence in name. Each professes to treat of "an action at law;" one being the work of the late Mr. John William Smith, now edited by Mr. Prentice, the editor of Chitty's Archbold's Practice; and the other being the production of Mr. Robert Malcolm Kerr, now judge of the Sheriffs' Court of London, who has brought out an edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, and now edited by Mr. Bassett Smith. Moreover, the label on the first is "Smith's Action at Law, seventh edition, by S. Prentice, Esq.," and that on the second "Kerr's Action at Law, third edition, by Smith;" so that the title, "Smith's Action at Law," is perfectly ambiguous, and very likely to mislead, especially students.

There is considerable merit in both works. The name of John William Smith is a sufficient guarantee for the first, while the second has rather the advantage in being the more recent, and published since the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860. We have no intention of comparing them in detail, and will just refer to one subject, in which we think they are both open to just criticism—we mean the power and practice of the courts in granting new trials—a matter of great importance, whether viewed in a constitutional or a professional light.

Thus Mr. Kerr informs us (p. 391), "If the judge erroneously direct the jury as to the effect of the evidence adduced, the party whose case or defence is thereby prejudiced may tender a bill of exceptions, or move for a new trial." This language is rather loose, and should be understood to mean, that if the judge erroneously directs the jury as to the legal effect of evidence, the Court will grant a new trial. There is no proposition more clearly established than this—that no comment of the judge on the facts in evidence, however unfounded, is ground for the interference of the Court.

Again (pp. 392, 393), Mr. Kerr tells us, "If the verdict is unreasonable, a new trial will be granted. Thus a new trial will be granted on the ground that the damages are excessive. . . .

"So, if the verdict has been against the weight of the evidence, a new trial will be granted, the Court being in this case always much influenced by the opinion of the judge who tried the cause. If he expresses dissatisfaction with the verdict, a new trial will be granted; but if the judge reports that the evidence was nearly balanced, so that the effect of it was for the jury, the Court will not interfere. If there was no evidence to have justified the jury in arriving at the conclusion at which they did arrive, the Court will always grant a new trial; and so, if the verdict was perverse—that is, directly contrary to the opinion of the judge—the Court will grant a new trial."

If a verdict is to be set aside because "it is directly contrary to the opinion of the judge," any person, a student or layman especially, might well ask, cui bono the jury? But the above is an incorrect statement. A perverse verdict is "where the jury refuse to listen to the law as correctly laid down to them by the judge." (Per Parke, B., in Mould v. Griffith, 8 Jur., part 1, p. 1010; see also Saunders v. Davies, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 481, per Pollock, C. B., and Hawkins v. Alder, 18 C. B. 640, per Jervis, C. J.) Besides, the former part of the sentence above quoted is not well expressed. Whether there was any evidence is a question of law, and consequently to be determined by the judge, who, when there is none, ought to withdraw the case from the jury altogether; and if he fails to do so, and leaves the case to them, the verdict will indeed be set aside, but on the ground of misdirection—a fault in the judge, not a fault in the jury. It is important not to lose sight of the distinction between these; for when the fault is that of the judge, a new trial is granted ex debito iustitiæ; whereas, when there is any evidence proper to be left to the jury, the Court will not set aside the verdict unless it is so clearly against the weight of the evidence, that the Court, in the exercise of its discretion (which must, however, be understood to mean a judicial, and not an arbitrary, one), determines that it ought not to be allowed to stand: (See Wood v. Gunston, Sty. 466, and Creed v. Fisher, 9 Exch. 472).

This subject is better treated in the other work before us, although even there not with the necessary clearness. Thus we are informed (p. 151), "One of the commonest grounds on which new trials are applied for is, that the verdict has been either against the weight of the evidence, or without any evidence at all. Where there was no evidence at all to warrant the conclusion come to by the jury, the Court will always grant a new trial; but where there was some evidence upon the winning side, they interfere, if at all, with great reluctance, considering that where there is conflicting testimony, it is the province of the JURY, not the COURT, to strike the balance. Still, if the judge who tried the cause express dissatisfaction with the verdict, it is usual, out of respect for his opinion, to submit the case to the investigation of another jury." Here, again, we find the ambiguous phrase, "where there was no evidence;" and the expression, that when the judge who tried the cause expresses dissatisfaction with the verdict, it will be set aside "out of respect to his opinion," is calculated to give rise to misunderstanding. The reason why the Court pays so much deference to the opinion of the judge by whom the cause was tried is, not out of respect to himself—which certainly would be a frail reason for inflicting on the parties the trouble and expense of a new trial—but that he has had the opportunity, which they have not had, of hearing the evidence, and, what is still of greater importance, observing the demeanour of the witnesses when giving it.

At p. 147 of this work it is stated that the first reported instance of a motion for a new trial is the case of Wood v. Gunston (Sty. 462, 466), in 1665. Wood v. Gunston was decided in 1656, but the above error is perhaps a misprint.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 8, 1861.

THE Federal Government of the United States of America has kept its word, by proclaiming a blockade of the ports of the Confederate States; and some correspondence on the subject between that Government and our own has been laid before the House of Commons. In a recent number (ante, p. 199) we referred to this unfortunate civil war, and the Queen's proclamation, by which all her Majesty's subjects are most emphatically cautioned against interference in that war; and distinct intimation is given that such as do interfere, and are thereby involved in difficulty or danger, must not expect protection or aid from their own Government, but, on the contrary, will incur the high displeasure of their Sovereign. On that occasion also we expressed our apprehension that efforts would be made by inconsiderate and unprincipled persons to involve us in a war with the United States, by relations of real or supposed outrages against British persons or property; and we have not been deceived in the anticipation. The whole matter has since been brought before the House of Commons on several occasions, and discussed by a portion of the periodical press, in a manner too plainly tending to that end. On the other hand, however, the Government has reiterated its fixed determination to observe a strict neutrality between the contending parties; and several independent members have, much to their credit, strongly denounced the proceedings above mentioned. And as further evidence of neutrality, the Government (having first consulted the law officers of the Crown) has given orders to interdict the armed ships and privateers of both the contending parties from carrying prizes into the ports, harbours, roadsteads, or waters of the United Kingdom, or of any of her Majesty's possessions abroad.

There cannot, we apprehend, be a shadow of doubt, that up to the present moment the Federal Government of America, in the matter of this blockade, has done nothing beyond what, according to the well-known and established law of nations, it had the most perfect right to do. It is an indisputable proposition of that law, that any belligerent power has a right to place the ports of its adversary in a state of blockade, and to treat as an enemy any neutral vessel which persists in attempting to enter any of those ports after notice of the existence of the blockade has been given, either to its Government or itself. At the Congress held at Paris in 1856, however, seven of the Great Powers of Europe, of which Great Britain was one, agreed that blockades, to be obligatory, must be effective. The Government of the United States of America was not, indeed, a party to that Congress; but probably the above was only declaratory of the pre-existing law of nations. Be this, however, as it may, that Government has at all times insisted on the principle then asserted, and on the present occasion has distinctly avowed its intention to abide by it; and, although the fact was brought to its notice, by our ambassador at Washington, that the line of coast which it was proposed to blockade had an extent of about 3000 miles, declared their belief of their power to make the blockade effective. With respect to one of the ports of that coast, indeed—Charleston—it is said that it is already blockaded by the United States frigate Niagara, one of the largest, if not the largest ship of war in the world.

It has been assumed by many persons, both in and out of Parliament, that the British Government has recognised the existence of the Confederate States of America as an existing Government; de facto, if not de jure; from which they have proceeded to deduce some consequences well calculated to embroil us in the dispute. The British Government has, however, refused to make any such recognition—at least, for the present; and the language of the proclamation, which is very carefully worded, appears to us to warrant no such inference.

Another disagreeable question connected with this subject has been started. The Government of the United States has declared its intention to treat as pirates the crews of all privateers bearing letters of marque from the Confederate States; and the case has been put, supposing among such crews there should chance to be British subjects, how ought the British Government to act? The permitting the above threat to be put in force might be construed as a recognition that the Confederate States were not a Government, either de jure or de facto, but rebels against lawful authority; to interpose would be asserting the reverse, and amount to recognising them as an actually existing Government—a course which might bring us into a war with the Federal Government. We are inclined to think that the former course would be the correct one. We are not sure that allowing that threat to be carried into execution necessarily amounts to declaring the Confederate States rebels; and even supposing that in carrying it into execution the Government of the United States would exceed its just rights, British subjects who suffer from that are not innocent persons. Their interference in that war would be in distinct violation of the laws of their own country, notwithstanding distinct notification by their Sovereign of the existence of those laws; and they could not, as appears to us, have any right to call on their Government to extricate them from difficulties into which they have themselves rushed in express defiance of its authority.

SIR GEORGE GREY'S ORDERS.—ALLOWANCES TO WITNESSES.

THE following has been forwarded to us by Messrs. Stephens & Matthews, solicitors, 29, Essex-street, Strand. The attorney mentioned is Mr. A. L. Eastlin, of the firm of Welsh & Eastlin, Somerton:—

The junior partner of a firm of solicitors in Somersetshire was subpoenaed as a witness at the Taunton Assizes, commencing on the 19th March last, on a highly important criminal prosecution, Reg. v. Munckton and Gent, who were charged with cutting a bank of the river Parrett in order to cause a flood. His firm are clerks to the bench of magistrates of the Somerton division, before whom the case was originally heard, and he was summoned, ex officio, to prove the depositions before the bench of a material witness, who died between his examination by the magistrates and the trial at the assizes.

The bill was found early, but the indictment not tried till the last day of the assizes; but, by arrangement with the prosecuting solicitor, Mr. H. Lovibond, of Bridgewater, the witness only remained four entire days in the assize town.

The following is the allowance made him:—

Four days, at 3s. 6d. ....	£0 14 0
Three nights, at 2s. ....	0 6 0
Mileage (18 miles to, 18 miles from). ....	0 16 0
	£1 16 0

The associate, on being applied to to increase the allowance to one guinea per diem (the witness being a duly-qualified practising solicitor), refused, on the ground that such was only payable where the professional witness was subpoenaed to give a professional opinion, and in this case he had only to prove depositions.

So that a practising solicitor is liable to be dragged from his business for four entire days, to his great detriment, and then, under the notorious orders, paid considerably less than his actual expenses in living and lodging in the assize town, and travelling.

It is in the option of an injured person to become a prosecutor or not, but a witness has no alternative but to obey the subpoena, and therefore the loss he sustains is a peculiar hardship upon him.

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE committee to which the Bankruptcy Bill of the Government was referred has made its report to the House, returning the bill with important amendments.

Lord Brougham has introduced a bill, similar to one that was unsuccessful last year, to assimilate the practice in criminal to that in civil cases, so far as relates to the speeches of counsel.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The Courts of Justice Building Bill has been referred to a select committee.

The Solicitor-General, in answer to a question, said, that in the present state of the public business, he could not name a day (certainly not an early day) for proceeding with the Criminal-law Consolidation Bills. This does not augur well for the probability of these important measures passing into law this session, and still less for their being passed after the full and calm discussion to which they are entitled.

With reference to the civil war in America, Lord John Russell stated that the Government, after consulting the law officers of the Crown, had given orders "to interdict the armed ships and also the privateers of both parties from carrying prizes made by them into the ports, harbours, roadsteads, or waters of the United Kingdom, or of any of her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad." The Minister added, that the French Government had declared its intention to act upon its own law; which, when France stands neutral in a war, requires all privateers of the contending parties, entering with prizes any of her ports or harbours, to depart within twenty-four hours, and prohibits the prizes being disposed of there.

LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, on Monday, the 27th May, Lord Brougham in the chair; when Mr. Thomas Webster read a paper on "The Amendment of the Patent Laws."

BILL IN PROGRESS.

ADMIRALTY COURT JURISDICTION BILL.

A Bill (with the Amendments made by the Commons), intituled "An Act to extend the Jurisdiction and improve the Practice of the High Court of Admiralty."

[Note.—The words printed in italics were omitted by the Commons, and the words printed in small capitals, and clauses A. and B., were added by the Commons.]

Whereas it is expedient to extend the jurisdiction and improve the practice of the High Court of Admiralty of England: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Admiralty Court Act, 1861."

2. In the interpretation and for the purposes of this act (if not inconsistent with the context or subject) the following words shall have the respective meanings hereinafter assigned to them—that is to say,

"Ship" shall include any description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars:

"Cause" shall include any cause, suit, action, or other proceeding in the Court of Admiralty.

3. This act shall come into operation on the 1st May, June, 1861.

4. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for the building, equipping, or repairing of any ship, if at the time of the institution of the cause the ship, or the proceeds thereof, are under the arrest of the court.

5. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for necessaries supplied to any ship elsewhere than in the port to which the ship belongs, unless it is shewn to the satisfaction of the court that at the time of the institution of the cause any owner or part owner of the ship is domiciled in England or Wales: provided always, that if in any such cause the plaintiff do not recover fifty twenty pounds he shall not be entitled to any costs, charges, or expenses incurred by him therein, unless the judge shall certify that the cause was a fit one to be tried in the said court.

6. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim by the owner, or consignee or assignee, of any bill of lading of any goods carried into any port in England or Wales in any ship, for damage done to the goods, or any part thereof, by the negligence or misconduct of, or for any breach of duty or breach of contract on the part of, the owner, master, or crew of the ship, unless it is shewn to the satisfaction of the court that at the time of the institution of the cause any owner or part owner of the ship is domiciled in England or Wales: provided always, that if in any such cause the plaintiff do not recover fifty twenty pounds, he shall not be entitled to any costs, charges, or expenses incurred by him therein, unless the judge shall certify that the cause was a fit one to be tried in the said court.

7. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship or barge: provided always, that if in any such cause the plaintiff do not recover 50*l.*, he shall not be entitled to any costs charges, or expenses incurred by him therein, unless the judge shall certify that the cause was a fit one to be tried in the said court.

A. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction to decide all questions touching the ownership, possession, employment, and earnings of any ship registered at any port in England or Wales, or any share thereof, and may settle all accounts outstanding and unsettled between the parties in relation thereto, and may direct the said ship, or any share thereof, to be sold, and may make such order in the premises as to it shall seem fit.

8. All the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, in regard to salvage of life from any ship or boat within the limits of the United Kingdom, shall be extended to the salvage of life from any British ship or boat, wheresoever the services may have been rendered, and from any foreign ship or boat, where the services have been rendered either wholly or in part in British waters.

9. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, whether the same be due under a special contract or otherwise, and also over any claim by the master of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, and for disbursements made by him on account of the ship: provided always, that if in any such cause the plaintiff do not recover 50*l.*, he shall not be entitled to any costs, charges, or expenses incurred by him therein, unless the judge shall certify that the cause was a fit one to be tried in the said court.

10. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim in respect of any mortgage duly registered according to the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, whether the ship, or the proceeds thereof, be under arrest of the said court or not.

11. The High Court of Admiralty shall have the same powers over any British ship, or any share therein, as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in England by the 62nd, 63rd, 64th, and 65th sections of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

12. Whenever any ship or vessel, or the proceeds thereof, are under arrest of the High Court of Admiralty, the said court shall have the same powers as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in England by the ninth part of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

13. The High Court of Admiralty shall be a court of record for all intents and purposes.

14. All decrees and orders of the High Court of Admiralty, whereby any sum of money, or any costs, charges, or expenses, shall be payable to any person, shall have the same effect as judgments in the superior courts of common law, and the persons to whom any such monies, or costs, charges, or expenses, shall be payable, shall be deemed judgment creditors; and all powers of enforcing judgments possessed by the superior courts of common law, or any judge thereof, with respect to matters depending in the same courts, as well against the ships and goods arrested as against the person of the judgment debtor, shall be possessed by the said Court of Admiralty with respect to matters therein depending; and all remedies at common law possessed by judgment creditors shall be in like manner possessed by persons to whom any monies, costs, charges, or expenses are, by such orders or decrees of the said Court of Admiralty, directed to be paid.

15. If any claim shall be made to any goods or chattels taken in execution under any process of the High Court of Admiralty, or in respect of the seizure thereof, or any act or matter connected therewith, or in respect of the proceeds or value of any such goods or chattels, by any landlord for rent, or by any person not being the party against whom the process has issued, the registrar of the said court may, upon application of the officer charged with the execution of the process, whether before or after any action brought against such officer, issue a summons calling before the said court both the party issuing such process and the party making the claim, and thereupon any action which shall have been brought in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, or in any local or inferior court, in respect of such claim, seizure, act, or matter as aforesaid, shall be stayed; and the court in which such action shall have been brought, or any judge thereof, on proof of the issue of such summons, and that the goods and chattels were so taken in execution, may order the party bringing the action to pay the costs of all proceedings had upon the action after issue of the summons out of the said Admiralty Court; and the judge of the said Admiralty Court shall adjudicate upon the claim, and make such order between the parties in respect thereof, and of the costs of the proceedings, as to him shall seem fit; and such order shall be enforced in like manner as any order made in any suit brought in the said court. Where any such claim shall be made as aforesaid, the claimant may deposit with the officer charged with the execution of the process either the amount or value of the goods claimed, the value to be fixed by appraisalment in case of dispute, to be by the officer paid into court to abide the decision of the judge upon the claim, or the sum which the officer shall be allowed to charge as costs for keeping possession of the goods until such decision can be obtained; and in default of the claimant so doing, the officer may sell the goods, as if no such claim had been made, and shall pay into court the proceeds of the sale, to abide the decision of the judge.

16. The judge of the High Court of Admiralty shall have all such powers as are possessed by any of the superior courts of common law, or any judge thereof, to compel either party in any cause or matter to answer interrogatories, and to enforce the production, inspection, and delivery of copies of any document in his possession or power.

17. Any party in a cause in the High Court of Admiralty shall be at liberty to apply to the said court for an order for the inspection by the Trinity Masters or others appointed for the trial of the said cause, or by the party himself or his witnesses, of any ship or other personal or real property, the inspection of which may be material to the issue of the cause, and the court may make such order in respect of the costs arising thereout as to it shall seem fit.

18. Any party in a cause in the High Court of Admiralty may call on any other party in the cause, by notice in writing, to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, the costs of proving the document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless at the trial the judge shall certify that the refusal to admit was reasonable.

19. Whenever it shall be made to appear to the judge of the High Court of Admiralty that reasonable efforts have been made to effect personal service of any citation, monition, or other process issued under seal of the said court, and either that the same has come to the knowledge of the party thereby cited or monished, or that he wilfully evades service of the same, and has not appeared thereto, the said judge may order that the party on whose behalf the citation, monition, or other process was issued be at liberty to proceed as if personal service had been effected, subject to such conditions as to the judge may seem fit, and all proceedings thereon shall be as effectual as if personal service of such citation, monition, or other process had been effected.

20. The service in any part of Great Britain or Ireland of any writ of subpoena ad testificandum or subpoena duces tecum, issued under seal of the High Court of Admiralty, shall be as effectual as if the same had been served in England or Wales.

21. Any new writ or other process necessary or expedient for giving effect to any of the provisions of this act may be issued from the High Court of Admiralty in such form as the judge of the said court shall from time to time direct.

22. All the powers possessed by any of the superior courts of common law, or any judge thereof, under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and otherwise, with regard to references to arbitration, proceedings thereon, and the enforcing of awards of arbitrators, shall be possessed by the judge of the High Court of Admiralty in all causes and matters depending in the said court; and the registrar of the said Court of Admiralty shall possess, as to such matters, the same powers as are possessed by the masters of the said superior courts of common law in relation thereto.

23. The registrar of the High Court of Admiralty shall have the same powers under the 15th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, as are by the said section conferred on the masters of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench in England and Ireland.

24. The registrar of the High Court of Admiralty may exercise, with reference to causes and matters in the said court, the same powers as any surrogate of the judge of the said court sitting in chambers might or could have heretofore lawfully exercised; and all powers and authorities by this or any other act conferred upon or vested in the registrar of the said High Court of Admiralty may be exercised by any deputy or assistant registrar of the said court.

25. The registrar of the said Court of Admiralty shall have power to administer oaths in relation to any cause or matter depending in the said court; and any person who shall wilfully depose or affirm falsely in any proceeding before the registrar, or before any deputy or assistant registrar, of the said court, or before any person authorised to administer oaths in the said court, shall be deemed to be guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to all the pains and penalties attaching to wilful and corrupt perjury.

26. Any advocate, barrister-at-law, proctor, attorney, or solicitor of ten years' standing, or any person who shall have been a clerk for at least fifteen years in the office of the registrar of the High Court of Admiralty, may be appointed registrar, or assistant, or deputy registrar of the said court.

27. Any advocate, barrister-at-law, proctor, attorney, or solicitor may be appointed an examiner of the High Court of Admiralty.

B. Any person who shall have paid, on his admission in any court as a proctor, solicitor, or attorney, the full stamp duty of 25*s.*, and who has been or shall hereafter be admitted a proctor, solicitor, or attorney (if in other respects entitled to be so admitted), shall be liable to no further stamp duty in respect of such subsequent admission.

28. Any proctor of the High Court of Admiralty may act as agent of any attorney or solicitor, and allow him to participate in the profits of and incident to any cause or matter depending in or connected with the said court; and nothing contained in the act of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 160, shall be construed to extend to prevent any proctor from so doing, or to render him liable to any penalty in respect thereof.

29. The act passed in the 2 Hen. 4, intituled "A Remedy for him who is wrongfully pursued in the Court of Admiralty," is hereby repealed.

30. Any party aggrieved by any order or decree of the judge of the said Court of Admiralty, whether made ex parte or otherwise, may, with the permission of the judge, appeal therefrom to her Majesty in Council, as fully and effectually as from any final decree or sentence of the said court.

31. In any cause in the High Court of Admiralty bail may be taken to answer the judgment as well of the said court as of the court of appeal, and the said High Court of Admiralty may withhold the release of any property under its arrest until such bail has been given; and in any appeal from any decree or order of the High Court of Admiralty, the court of appeal may make and enforce its order against the surety or sureties who may have signed any such bail bond, in the same manner as if the bail had been given in the court of appeal.

32. The High Court of Admiralty may, on the application of the defendant in any cause of damage, and on his instituting a cross cause for the damage sustained by him in respect of the same collision, direct that the principal cause and the cross cause be heard at the same time and upon the same evidence; and if in the principal cause the ship of the defendant has been arrested, or security given by him to answer judgment, and in the cross cause the ship of the plaintiff cannot be arrested, and security has not been given to answer judgment therein, the court may, if it think fit, suspend the proceedings in the principal cause until security has been given to answer judgment in the cross cause.

33. The jurisdiction conferred by this act on the High Court of Admiralty may be exercised either by proceedings in rem or by proceedings in personam.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

TRINITY TERM, 24 VICT.—June 4, 1861.

This Court will hold sittings on Thursday the 13th and Friday the 14th days of June instant, also on Thursday the 20th day of June instant, and the two following days, and on Monday the 24th day of June instant and the two following days, and will at such sittings proceed in disposing of the causes in the New Trial, Special, and Crown Papers, and any other matter then pending. The Court will also hold a sitting on Tuesday the 9th day of July next, at eleven o'clock A.M., for the purpose of giving judgment in causes and matters previously argued. BY THE COURT.

COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.—

This Court has just given two important decisions. By one, the full Court (consisting of the Judge Ordinary, Wightman and Williams, JJ.) has confirmed the ruling of the Judge Ordinary in Gray v. Gray (to which we have referred, ante, p. 187); that where, after a decree nisi has been granted for a divorce, the Attorney-General interposes to impeach the proceedings on the ground of collusion, the petitioner will not be allowed to withdraw the petition against the will of the Attorney-General. The other is in a case of Wing v. Taylor, where the same judges held that a marriage is not rendered void by the fact, that before marriage the husband had unlawful intercourse with the mother of the wife, which it was contended created an affinity between the parties. The Judge Ordinary, in delivering his judgment, said that one consequence of such a doctrine would obviously be, that no marriage, however solemnised, could be rendered secure against impeachment by any amount of care and caution.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 15, 1861.

ALTHOUGH a tenant for life without impeachment of waste has full power to fell timber (except such as may have been planted for ornament), if the estate be sold under the usual power of sale contained in the instrument by which he takes, he cannot lay claim to the money for which the timber on the estate may sell. This point was decided by Lord Thurlow in the year 1792, in the case of Doran v. Wiltshire (3 Swanst. 699). There lands were settled on the plaintiff Doran for life without impeachment of waste; then on the other plaintiff, his wife, for her jointure; with remainder to their issue; and there was power for the plaintiffs to sell the premises with the consent and approbation of the trustees, the trustees to receive the purchase money, and lay it out again in lands to the same uses. In the bill filed by the plaintiffs against the defendant for a specific performance of an agreement for the sale of the premises (which included the timber on the estate), the plaintiff Doran claimed to appropriate to his own use the produce of the timber. Lord Thurlow, however, said he thought, as to the produce of the timber trees, the plaintiff Doran could not be entitled to it; and added—"There is a great difference between a tenant for life cutting down timber for which he is not impeachable while he actually occupies the land, and in executing a power to sell. In the latter case he is not to have the value for himself." The same point was also determined in Wolf v. Hill (2 Swanst. 149, note).

The question next arose, when estates were sold under an ordinary power of sale, apart from the standing timber (there being a tenant for life unimpeachable for waste, who received the price of the timber), whether the power was well executed; and if it was not, whether the defect could be remedied in equity. Both these points were determined in the negative in an important and much-litigated case, Cholmeley v. Paxton (3 Bing. 207; 5 Bing. 48; S. C., nom. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 10 B. & Cr. 564; S. C., in equity, 1 Russ. & M. 423; 3 Russ. 565; 6 Bligh, N. S., 120; 1 Cl. & Fin. 60), where it was decided at law, both in the Common Pleas and the King's Bench, that although a tenant for life be dispunishable for waste, and may cut down and sell the timber for his own benefit, yet, under a common power of sale and exchange in the instrument under which he was entitled, a sale by the trustees, under the power, of the estate without the timber, and a sale by himself of the standing timber, was invalid as an execution of the power, and that a subsequent investment, by the tenant for life, of the timber money, in the name of the trustee of the settlement, did not cure the invalidity. And, moreover, it was held in equity (1 Russ. & M. 418), that the defect in the execution of the power was of such a nature that it could not be cured in equity, inasmuch as there was no mistake, the conveyance having effectuated the real intention of the parties; and this decision was affirmed by the House of Lords. (6 Bligh, N. S., 120; 1 Cl. & Fin. 60).

This case has been recently held to be applicable to the reservation of minerals, on a sale of lands by trustees under a general power of sale. The case alluded to is that of Buckley v. Howell (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 536). There the testator devised land unto and to the use of trustees for 500 years, and, subject thereto, to his eldest son for life in possession, and his assigns for life, without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over in strict settlement. The will contained a power for tenants for life to lease the lands, and all or any of the mines and quarries then opened, or thereafter to be opened, for any term of years, not exceeding, as to the said mines and quarries, the term of forty years, and as to the lands, the term of twenty-one years. And there was a power of sale given to the trustees, at the request, in writing, of the tenant for life, absolutely to make sale of all or any part of the lands and hereditaments thereby devised, and the inheritance thereof, subject to such special or other conditions, as to title or otherwise, as to the said trustees should seem reasonable. And there was a provision that the monies to arise from such sale should, after the payment of certain incumbrances, be invested in the purchase of hereditaments, to be settled upon the same uses and trusts as those devised by the testator. The trustees put up for sale certain parts of the devised estate, and, by one of the conditions, reserved the minerals. The purchaser at the sale refusing to complete, Sir J. Romilly, M. R., upon the authority of Cholmeley v. Paxton, held that the vendor could not sell the surface of the land apart from the minerals. His Honor thought that the principle applicable to cases of this kind was this—that the power, when exercised, must be so exercised as not to give to the tenant for life, out of the property subject to the power, more than he would have had if it had not been exercised; that the mines were a part of the corpus which the tenant for life (being, as in the case under consideration, unimpeachable for waste) was entitled to win and sell, and of which he might obtain the profits; but the surface being sold, the purchase money was to be re-invested in land; and if an estate, with valuable minerals under it, should be presented to the trustees for purchase by them, as the most eligible mode of investment, the tenant for life would be getting minerals from under the two estates. It was obvious that could not be prevented, because the Court could not refuse to allow the purchase money to be invested in the purchase of an estate with minerals under it, if such a purchase were a beneficial one for the persons entitled; and it could neither restrict the purchase to the acquisition of land in which the value was merely agricultural, nor prevent the present tenants for life from obtaining such an estate. It was obvious also that the Court could not exact from the tenant for life a promise not to purchase any land of that description, or, if exacted, the Court could not enforce it; that it was exactly the same in this case as in that of timber—no promise or undertaking as to re-investment would be of any avail, nor could it be enforced by the Court.

The decision of the Master of the Rolls appears to us to fall completely within the principle of the decisions with reference to timber. Indeed, the reasons for holding a sale of a settled estate under a power, with a reservation of minerals, bad, appears to be much stronger than those which exist with reference to timber.

With regard to mines, although a tenant for life without impeachment of waste might open them on the settled estate immediately before a sale, in no conceivable case scarcely could he exhaust them during the time which would be taken up in felling all the timber on the estate, which, according to the decisions, he might do, and might appropriate the proceeds to his own uses, and might afterwards in like manner fell the timber on any estate purchased with the proceeds arising from the sale of the estate sold under the power.

The decision of the Master of the Rolls is of much importance to conveyancers, as it may suggest in some cases, and under certain circumstances, an alteration in the frame of wills and settlements, and of the usual powers of sale and exchange. And in the investigation of titles, where estates have been sold under powers, it will suggest great caution in ascertaining in all cases that there has been no reservation of the minerals by the vendors; which, after the able exposition of the law and clear reasoning of the Master of the Rolls, no one can for a moment doubt would utterly invalidate the sale.

THE CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION BILLS.

If we saw a man arranging an inventory of the furniture in his house according to the nature of the different items, and not according to their relation to the rooms in which they were placed for use—objectively, and not subjectively—we might possibly presume, in favour of his sanity, that he must have some rational, though unusual, aim in so doing; but if we found him afterwards actually placing the articles themselves together for use according to the same classification, collecting all the chairs into one room, all the tables into another, all the carpets into a third, and so forth, we should assuredly recommend his friends to obtain, as soon as possible, a certificate of his fitness for confinement as a tazimanian, or by whatever other name his half-brothers in misfortune might think fit to ticket him.

It is disheartening and humiliating to think that a proceeding no less insane than that which we have imagined is now proposed to the country as the fruit of all the time, money, and professional skill that have been spent upon the project of a consolidation of the criminal law. To show that this is so, we gladly avail ourselves of Mr. Coode's terse and forcible observations, in the following extracts from his well-timed Letter to Lord Palmerston on these bills:—

"What is desired and expected under the name of consolidation of the statute law is assuredly this—that so much of the statute law as is now found dispersed through the Statute Book should be collected together and arranged in such a way that the parts that have most connexion in meaning and effect should be most closely brought together, so that they shall throw mutual light the one on the other; that every subject, so far as the statute law affects it, should be seen in its entirety in one act, and not as now, disjointed and dispersed in many acts.

"Thus every right—say, for instance, the right to the use of a man's body—is most clearly connected with the obligations imposed on other men to respect his liberty, and alone explains and justifies these obligations; and the clear understanding of both these, again, is indispensable for the understanding of any declaration or definition of acts diminishing the use of the body, which are wrongs, offences, or crimes only inasmuch as they contravene these rights and obligations, and are not possibly to be conceived as wrongs, offences, or crimes in any other way; and again, the precedent understanding of these rights, these obligations, these wrongs, is equally and absolutely indispensable for the understanding and appreciation of any appliances of the law for the protection of the right and enforcement of the obligation, whether ministerial, or preventive, or compulsive, or restitutive, or remedial, or compensatory, or penal, and of any choice of ministers or tribunals, and of any course of procedure provided for protecting that same right or enforcing the corresponding obligations. This connexion is not merely verbal or logical—is not merely an association by resemblance; it is an actual, essential, intimate, and indissoluble connexion, in which each part is necessary to the creation, co-existence, and intelligibility of the other. The collection from out of the chaos of the Statute Book of all the provisions that affected such a right, in the order of the appropriate and subservient obligations, the prohibited wrongs, the legal protections, ministerial, civil, equitable, or penal, would be, as to that particular right, a perfect, self-consistent, and self-explaining consolidation of the statute law—intelligible, so far as the nature of the subject admitted of it, to every man, and affording an infallible clue to every man by which to find the statutory matter he might be in search of. The certain light, the sure test of the policy, the ready means of appreciating the policy, of all parts of the law, which this method would afford, is what all men instinctively desire and expect who hear of a ‘consolidation’ of the law; and this is what every good treatise on the law performs. Done by the Legislature for the statute law, this work would be, so far as it went, a true consolidation—a placing together of all those parts of any subject which make up the whole of that particular subject.

“But no consolidation, in any sense of the term, is possible on the plan of these bills, which is that of picking out the similar or identical parts from all subjects, and stringing all those similar parts together in one bill. Two penalties may be enacted in absolutely identical terms, but they have no connexion of any kind with each other, either legal, moral, or logical, unless they protect the same right.” (p. 3).

“The collection of identical parts must always necessarily be the destruction of the whole from which they are taken. For instance, taken and viewed apart, the spring, the balance, the dial, the hands of a watch, would be things of little significance; but seen in their mutual connexion they are admirable and intelligible. A child could take off the hands of hundreds of watches, and could collect them into a box, but he would not by this act pretend to give these hands any connexion or relationship to each other; he would not pretend to construct watches; he would be a collector of similar parts, but a destroyer of the wholes of the watches.” (p. 5).

“A butcher severs shoulders of mutton as like each other as possible, and hangs them together on one line, but he does not call his arrangement a consolidation; he admits that he has permanently destroyed the connexion which nature had made between those parts and the organic wholes from which he separated them. But this is the strange pretence of these bills, that the like dilaniation of whole organic subjects in law, by cutting out their penal portions and stringing them together in the form of bills, is something logical, or systematic, or constructive—an improvement in form or order—and is to be accepted as ‘consolidation.’

“A few moments’ consideration will assuredly beget the conviction that there is no consolidation possible by the aggregation of similar parts, but that the collection of similar parts is necessarily destruction and disintegration of the subjects from which those parts are taken. If so, no consolidation is possible of the so-called penal law or criminal law. Twenty-eight years of effort of commissions, of committees, of both Houses of Parliament, and 60,000*l.* of public money expended, have been made fruitless through the folly of attempting a consolidation which must be necessarily a dissolidation. It is to be hoped that the evil will end here, in a mere loss of time and money, and a mere disappointment of hopes absurdly entertained, and that what is thus far no more than an idle folly will not be converted into a permanent active mischief by carrying these bills into law.” (p. 6).

For example—“The 16 & 17 Vict. c. 23, contains forty-two perfectly well-connected sections for redeeming and commuting South Sea and other Annuities, for creating new Annuities, and issuing Exchequer Bonds, with all necessary incidental provisions for giving course, value, and trustworthiness to these instruments—amongst others, one penal clause, the 41st, making the forgery of them a felony, quite in its proper place and connexion, where its use and effect can be most easily seen and judged of. But these bills take out this 41st section, placing it in a bill with all other heterogeneous forgeries, and leaving the original act a fragment of forty-one clauses.” (p. 9).

Mr. Coode then gives a list of similar maimings and disintegrations of well-connected English acts of Parliament, so far as they are affected by these bills, shewing about 50 sections taken out from their proper connexions with 632 others, leaving in a dismembered and fragmentary state 580 others.

“Such is the havoc made in acts already passed, which treat connectedly of the whole of any subject-matter, by the excision of their penal portions. The like effect is produced by anticipation upon all whole subjects which may be taken up for future consolidation; and these are all forejudged of their penal elements—foredoomed to imperfection, to ante-natal dismemberment, to a divided existence—one member of their organic whole dis severed from the rest, and relegated to this chaos of penal clauses. These bills are, then, not less a destruction of the connexion of our existing legislation than an absolute obstruction to all future consolidation.” (p. 9).

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JURIST.”

SIR,—In your last number (June 8) you consider briefly the question whether a British subject serving in a privateer, bearing letters of marque from the Confederate States of America, and taken prisoner by the forces of the Northern States, could properly claim the interference of this country to protect him from the punishment of death threatened to the crews of such vessels by the United States Government. You intimate an opinion that the British Government ought not to interfere in such a case.

If you are willing to open your columns to a discussion on the subject, will you allow me to suggest a view of the question that would seem to point to another conclusion?

There can be little doubt that the proclamation of the 13th May (of which the material parts were given ante, p. 201) would preclude any British subject so serving, and so taken, from effectually claiming the protection of his country against any punishment rightfully inflicted according to the law of nations as commonly received. But is the infliction of the punishment of death on the privateersmen of the Confederate States authorised by any possible interpretation of international law?

As far as Great Britain is concerned, the Confederate States, so soon as they shall have public ships of war or privateers afloat, and be actually engaged in a maritime warfare with the Northern States, will be de facto belligerents, entitled to belligerent rights, even if we have not already recognised them as such. As far as the Government of Washington is concerned, it was doubtless competent to them to say to the seceding States, “We shall not acknowledge you as belligerents—we shall treat you as rebels; and we claim the right to hang every man bearing Mr. Jef-fergson Davis's commission." But the Northern States have not chosen to say so. So far as I am aware, much as they have threatened, they have made no threat of considering the crews of the public ships of war of the Southern States, or their soldiers serving on land (other than those who may have deserted from the United States army), as hors de la loi. The threat of death is only to those who may be taken in privateers, and must, therefore, be founded upon the character of the service in which they are engaged.

Here, then, we have the Northern States, by this silence at least, acknowledging the seceders as a belligerent power, respecting their commissions on land—admitting any regular navy they may have to the benefit of the usages of war, but choosing to declare that they will consider privateering as piracy. This declaration, I submit, cannot be justified by any rule of international law. No nation, not even any one of those who were parties to the Declaration of the Congress of Paris of 1856, has a right to treat privateering as piracy by the general law of nations, any more than States who may have entered into a contract inter se to put an end to the slave trade have a right to say that carrying slaves generally is an offence jure gentium. So that, not even if we allowed the preposterous claim said to be made by Mr. Seward, that the United States may be now, in the face of present events, admitted as a party to the Declaration of that Congress, could they found upon such admission any right to treat privateering under the letters of marque of a belligerent, who has never acceded to that Declaration, as piracy.

But least of all nations can the United States claim to look upon privateering as an offence. While their only prospect of war was with powers possessing navies numerically stronger than their own, they have consistently refused to abolish that cheap defence of nations, the right of issuing letters of marque, unless private property should be exempted from capture by sea as well as by land. This was the ground on which they expressly refused to accede to that very Declaration of Paris of which they now desire to adopt the benefit. They have no more right to turn suddenly round now, and say they will hang privateersmen, than Great Britain would have had a right to turn round before the late Russian war, and say she would hang the crew of every ship that made prize of enemies' goods in a neutral bottom.

May not, then, the British subject, taken serving in a Southern privateer, justly invoke the assistance of his Government if he is treated with a different measure from the British subject taken serving in a regular man-of-war sailing under the same flag? He has committed no greater offence than the other against the law of his own country, or the general law of nations. Or will it be said, "You were warned you would have no protection against 'any liabilities or penal consequences,' and you must be left to your fate, however unjust or barbarous that fate may be? Whatever punishment the Northern States may choose to declare they will inflict, whether they kill you, torture you, or sell you to slavery"—for the argument must go this length—"you will have no help from home."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. A. L.

[We have much pleasure in inserting this letter, and shall take an early opportunity of reverting to the important question to which it relates. We cannot, however, go along with our correspondent in assuming that the Federal Government of the United States intend to treat as "belligerents" the land and sea forces of the Confederate States; on the contrary, they always speak of them as "rebels," "traitors," "insurgents," &c.—Ed.]

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

IN the committee on the Bankruptcy Bill of the Government, Lord Chelmsford moved to insert a clause to take away the retrospective operation of the bill in the case of non-traders. This was opposed by the Lord Chancellor, and gave rise to a debate, but was carried by a majority of 37; the numbers being 98 to 61.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Denman moved for a committee to inquire into the well-known case of the Baron de Bode. This was opposed by the Government, but carried by a large majority.

In a former number (ante, p. 159) we noticed a bill introduced by Mr. Locke, having for its object to extend to criminal cases the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, for the relief in civil cases of persons entertaining conscientious objections to taking oaths. After that bill had passed a second reading, the honourable and learned gentleman withdrew it, and substituted another to the same effect. The second reading of this latter was opposed, but carried by a majority of 34; the numbers being 65 to 31.

The bill introduced into the House of Commons by Sir John Trelawny, to allow affirmations or declarations to be made instead of oaths in certain cases, to which we adverted in two former numbers (see ante, pp. 95, 159), has been rejected by a large majority, on the motion for a second reading.

At a morning sitting on Tuesday, the 11th June, the seven bills introduced by the Solicitor-General for the consolidation and amendment of some of the most important parts of the criminal law (see ante, p. 219) passed through committee, after very slight discussion, it being understood that amendments to them might be moved on bringing up the reports.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 22, 1861.

In two former numbers (ante, pp. 199, 227) we directed attention to the civil war that has broken out between the Federal Government of the United States of America and the States styling themselves Confederate States, and also to some questions of international law to which it is likely to give rise. Among these is one of a very disagreeable nature—namely, what course ought the Government of this country to pursue in the event of any British subjects, who are captured by the Federal Government while serving in privateers sent forth by the Confederate States, being treated as pirates, according to the declaration made by that Government that it will so treat the crews of such privateers? We stated the inclination of our opinion to be, that, under such circumstances, our Government ought not to interfere; but a correspondent having, in an able letter, which will be found in THE JURIST of last week (ante, p. 237), disputed this, we have given the subject deliberate attention, and feel only the more satisfied with the correctness of our original impression.

The state of the facts is simply this:—Great Britain is at peace with the Government of the United States of America. A certain number of those States have declared their intention to secede, and their secession, from the Union. Their right to do this is denied by the Federal Government; and both parties have had recourse to arms to enforce their respective views. The Confederate States have issued, or declared their intention of issuing, letters of marque; to which the Federal Government retorts, that all vessels acting by virtue of such will be treated as piratical, and their crews dealt with and punished as pirates. The British Government declares its neutrality in the quarrel, and the Sovereign has, in the most emphatic manner, by a proclamation (see ante, p. 200), cautioned her subjects against interference in it; adding these words—"And we do hereby declare that all our subjects, and persons entitled to our protection, who may misconduct themselves in the premises, will do so at their peril, and of their own wrong, and that they will in nowise obtain any protection from us against any liabilities or penal consequences, but will, on the contrary, incur our high displeasure by such misconduct."

Our Government, as appears both by the above proclamation and several other declarations and acts, has declined to express any opinion on the question, whether, by the constitution of the United States, any of the States composing the Union has a right to secede from it, either at pleasure or in consequence of misgo-vernment and oppression at the hands of the rest. If either no such right exists, or no case has arisen to justify the resort to so strong a measure, the troops of the Confederate States are traitors; it may truly be said, that in them "the spotted rebel stains the soldier," and, it is needless to add, they are liable to capital punishment whenever taken. And it is equally certain, that where there is rebellion against a lawful government, every foreigner acting with the rebels is liable to be treated in the same manner as they—nothing being more clear than the principle, that a foreigner, while under the protection of the flag of any power, owes that power a temporary allegiance.

But suppose, on the other hand, that the Federal Government is wrong in its views on this subject, and that it has no right to carry out its threat of capital punishment on either native Americans or foreigners captured when in the service of the Southern Confederation, does it necessarily follow that Great Britain must interpose to avenge any of her subjects so treated? We take it that the right to wage war does not, at least in all cases, carry with it a corresponding obligation to wage it. Any person conversant with the history of Europe and America for the last thirty years will easily call to mind scores of acts amounting to casus belli which were not treated as such—sometimes from the inability of the injured State to assert its rights, sometimes from the injury being too trivial to be worthy notice, sometimes from political reasons, and sometimes, we may hope, from a spirit of magnanimity. In many cases it is the glory of a man to overlook offences, and we see no reason why the maxim should not hold in the case of nations. Now, has the British subject who enters into a foreign service—perhaps in violation of the law of nations, but certainly in defiance both of the common and statute law of England, and of distinct warning given by his Sovereign—any fair or equitable claim to the protection of that Sovereign against any injury, or even outrage, which he may suffer in consequence of his misconduct? The Sovereign might, perhaps, in pure compassion, intercede to save his life, but surely is not bound to take up arms for that purpose.

The correspondent to whom we have referred argues, however, that the Federal Government of the United States has no right to treat as pirates the crews of the privateers of the Confederate States, because it has, he says, recognised as belligerents the regular land and sea forces of those States. We really are not aware of this fact; on the contrary, so far as our observation leads us, the Federal Government always speaks of the forces of the Confederate States as traitors, rebels, insurgents, &c. But even if the Federal Government had done as our correspondent says, we do not see how that makes any difference. Suppose (absit omen) that several counties of England were in insurrection against the Government, and fighting against it not only on land, but also on sea, both by ships of war and privateers; and the Government were to issue a proclamation, declaring that they would treat the land and regular sea forces of the rebels according to the rules of ordinary warfare, but would treat as pirates the crews of the privateers, will it be seriously contended that the Government would not have a perfect right to do this? Asserting the negative amounts to saying that a Sovereign cannot remit a portion of his right to punish traitors, and retain the rest—that if he declares an intention of not enforcing that right against certain classes of insurgents, he forfeits his right to enforce it against all others.

Such appears to us the true view of this subject. It is, at all events, that adopted by our Government in the proclamation to which reference has been made, and similar views are entertained by another great European State. The Emperor of the French has recently issued a proclamation, which we have not had the advantage of seeing in the original, and are consequently obliged to take on the credit of a translation. This document, after strictly enjoining neutrality in the American dispute, concludes thus:—"His Majesty declares, moreover, that every Frenchman contravening the present (enactments prescriptions) will have no claim to any protection from his Government against any acts or measures, whatever they may be, which the belligerents may exercise or decree."

Reviews.

Wrongs and their Remedies; being a Treatise on the Law of Torts. By C. G. ADDISON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Law of Contracts." [V. & R. Stevens & Sons; Hodges & Smith, Dublin. 1860.]

WE have looked forward to the publication of this book with considerable interest, as professing to fill up a very important gap in our legal library, the learning on torts having hitherto been presented to the public in a very fragmentary manner. We can imagine no task more inviting to the legal writer than the one undertaken by Mr. Addison—no finer opportunity for writing a scientific treatise containing broad unimpeachable principles, under which might be grouped a vast variety of scattered learning, of which the close connexion might be shewn, and the apparent contrarieties discussed and explained. A very short time sufficed to disabuse us of the hope that our author was going to present to us a work of this kind. The little disquisition on torts with which he opens his Preface did not encourage us to expect anything particularly scientific; but when we found him not merely avow that he only intended to treat of "such wrongs and injuries to property, to the person, and to reputation as constantly occur in the ordinary intercourse of mankind, and daily occupy the attention of the lawyer" (Preface, p. vi), and that he had "endeavoured to present to the reader an accurate view of the present state of the law on the subjects treated of, without burthening his mind with technical legal learning, which is now obsolete, or perplexing his judgment with contradictory and conflicting decisions"—when we found this, we not only perceived that we were not going to get the work we wanted, but also felt considerably puzzled as to what sort of book we were going to peruse. On turning to the table of contents we could not discover any principle in the arrangement; and, after carefully reading the entire book, we are compelled to say that in no way can we consider it to be a scientific one—a judgment which, we think, any reader will indorse after a perusal merely of the first chapter, which opens like a page of Comyn's Digest, taken at hazard. As to its being a book of reference, when the author refuses to have anything to do with conflicting decisions, we leave our readers to judge whether it can be considered complete. But take it as a collection of decided law, arranged under different heads, and let us consider how the author has acquitted himself. The principle of division adopted by Mr. Addison, or, more correctly speaking, the way in which he has carried it out, has in several instances caused information, which should have been gathered into one place, to be inconveniently separated. To give an instance: under the head "Trespass, and Conversion of Chattels" (c. 6, s. 1, p. 190), we find a portion of the learning respecting lost and stolen notes, and negotiable securities; and under the head "Of the Title to Chattels Personal" (c. 6, s. 2, p. 203) another portion, with no reference from the one place to the other.

Again: our author certainly discusses many of his subjects in an imperfect manner. In some instances, perhaps, he could hardly do more without breaking his rule, of avoiding any difficulty presented by conflicting decisions, as in the cases of a man setting dangerous instruments on his premises, and the title to negotiable instruments improperly obtained, both of which subjects present such difficulties, and are in proportion unsatisfactorily treated. But this reason can hardly justify the imperfect treatment of forcible entry (p. 140); the right to hedges and ditches (p. 155); trespass by relation (p. 172); the recovery of money paid under duress of goods (p. 792); and waste (p. 118 et seq.)—the imperfection of this last subject, however, mainly arising from the want of the equity cases; and we observe that he has forgotten to mention, at p. 205, the fact, that where the sale by a bankrupt is the act of bankruptcy, it is not protected.

We also find some actual blunders: thus, at p. 154, we find The Monmouthshire Canal and Railway Company v. Hill cited to shew that landowners, whose lands abut on a navigable river or canal, have generally the right to form wharves, whereas that case turned only on the special provisions of a Canal Act. Again: at pp. 674 and 680 we find the powers given to a judge of assize under sect. 17 of stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (the Divorce Act), stated as existing, although they were repealed by stat. 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 19. And at p. 741 it is stated that a plaintiff is at liberty in all personal actions to lay his venue where he pleases; while, in discussing the effect of a sale in market overt (p. 198), he gives us stat. 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, and then says, that by virtue of that statute, and of stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 57, to the same effect, the right of property in things stolen is restored to the person robbed immediately on conviction of the offender—being apparently unaware of the fact that the former statute, which referred only to felonies, was repealed by stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, and the latter one (extending to false pretences) substituted.

We should, perhaps, also mention, that we find from the Preface that "it was intended to have concluded the present work with a chapter upon the remedies afforded for certain civil wrongs by way of mandamus and injunction; but so many changes are projected and being carried out in this remedial branch of our law, that it has been thought advisable to postpone the consideration of it." The want of any reference to this subject of course makes the work still more incomplete; but as this portion of our law (as administered by our common-law courts) is at present wanting in legal decisions, it would be out of place in a book which so carefully avoids anything like discussion or deduction.

It must not be inferred from these remarks that this book shews signs of scissors and paste work; notwithstanding its bulk there is not the slightest sign of this; every page of it discloses the conscientiousness and labour of the author; and for this reason we greatly regret that, in the discharge of our duty, we have had to make the above strictures. We think this book, as far as it goes, is generally to be depended on; but that it is necessarily imperfect, from the method which the author has deliberately adopted of avoiding conflicting cases—a method so rigorously pursued that he even avoids pointing out where these difficulties lie. Containing, however, as it does, an immense mass of information never yet put together in one volume, we look upon it, even with its faults, to be an useful addition to our law library.

CHANCERY ORDER.

WHEREAS it is proper that the accounts kept by the Accountant-General of this court should be examined and compared in order to settle the same; and whereas it will require considerable time to perfect such examination, and it is necessary that a time should be appointed for closing the books of accounts of the said Accountant-General for the purposes aforesaid: I do order that the books of the said Accountant-General be closed from and after Monday, the 19th August next, to Monday, the 28th October next, inclusive, excepting upon the days and for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, in order to adjust the accounts of the suitors with the books kept at the Bank; and that during that time no draft for any money, except as hereinafter provided, or certificate for any effects under the care and direction of this court, be signed or delivered out by the Accountant-General, or any stocks or annuities accepted or transferred by him relating to the suitors of this court; and that no purchase, sale, or transfer be made by the said Accountant-General, unless the order and request or registrar's certificate be left at his office on or before Thursday, the 8th August next; and that no order for payment of any money out of court, which may be then in court, be received in the Accountant-General's office after Saturday, the 10th August next: provided, nevertheless, that the office of the said Accountant-General shall be open on Monday, the 14th, Tuesday, the 15th, and Wednesday, the 16th October next, for the delivery out of any regular interest drafts which have become payable in respect of the October dividends, and of any other regular interest drafts which shall have become payable during the closing of the office as aforesaid. And to the end that the suitors may have notice hereof, and apply to the Court, as there shall be occasion, to have money paid to them out of the Bank, or stocks or annuities transferred to them before the 19th August next, I do order that this Order be entered and set up in the several offices of this court.

June 6, 1861. (Signed) CAMPBELL, C.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

TRINITY TERM, 1861.

AT the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. Germain Lavie, M. A., aged twenty-five, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Oliverson & Peachey, of Frederick's-place, London, and Messrs. Crowder, Maynard, Son, & Lawford, of Coleman-street, London.

2. Charles Albert Bannister, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Pearson, of Guildhall, London, and Messrs. Davidson, Bradbury, & Hardwick, of Basinghall-street, London.

3. William Henry Churton, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. John & John George Holden, of Liverpool, and Messrs. Cunliffe & Beaumont, of Chancery-lane, London.

4. William Crump Thomas, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Duignan & Ebsworth, Walsall, and Messrs. Mackeson & Goldring, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, London.

5. Charles Buckley, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Ponsonby, of Oldham, and Mr. William Hunt of Gray's-inn, London.

6. Abel Tillett, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Wace Lockett Mendham, of Norwich.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Lavie, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's Inn; to Mr. Bannister, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clement's Inn; to Mr. Churton, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Thomas, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Buckley, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Tillett, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Henry Botterill, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. England, Saxelbye, & Roberts, of Hull; George John Cuddon, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Blount & Davis, of Uak, Messrs. Duncan, Squarey, Duncan, & Blackmore, of Liverpool, and Messrs. Field & Boscoe, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, London; Benjamin Greene Lake, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. H. & G. Lake & Kendall, of Lincoln's-inn, London; Henry Fricker Lawes the younger, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Dix, of Bristol, and Messrs. Meredith & Lucas, of Lincoln's-inn, London; Charles Frederick Lowe, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Falkner & Newbald, of Newark; Frederick Heygate Nunneley, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Staniland &

Chapman, of Boston, Messrs. Staniland & Wigelsworth, of Boston, and Messrs. Tooke & Co., of Bedford-row, London; Frederick Danby Palmer, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Reynolds & Palmer, of Great Yarmouth, and Messrs. Gray & Woodcock, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, London; and Frederick William Pamphilon, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Day, of Queen-street, May-fair, London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

George Brown, aged thirty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Henry Newton, of York; Sutton John Elliott, aged twenty-six, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Henry Binsteed, of Portsmouth; John Bridges Nunn, aged twenty-six, who served his clerkship to Mr. Albert Dixon, of Bedford-row, Mr. George Matthews Arnold, of Gravesend, and Mr. Richard Higgins Burne, of Carey-street, London; William Conning Shepherd, aged twenty-eight, who served his clerkship to Messrs. De Jersey & Micklem, of Gresham-street West, London; and William Theodore Pitt Watkins, aged twenty-eight, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Harris, of Bristol, and Mr. Richard Walker Pigeon, of Bristol.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 125; of these 120 were passed, and 5 postponed.

By order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, June 13, 1861.

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

June 18.—The Government Bill to amend the Law of Bankruptcy and Insolvency has been read a third time and passed, with considerable amendments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

June 14.—On the motion for the third reading of the Courts of Justice Building Bill, it was stated by the Government that the measure would be inoperative until a bill, to be brought in by the Attorney-General for the removal of the courts of justice, should be passed. The third reading was adjourned.

June 17.—The Attorney-General gave notice that he would on the 20th June move for leave to bring in a bill for the removal of the courts of justice; until when the third reading of the Courts of Justice Building Bill would be suspended.

Two of the bills introduced by the Solicitor-General for the consolidation and amendment of the Criminal Law, i. e. "The Accessories and Abettors Bill" and "The Criminal Statutes Repeal Bill," were read a third time and passed.

June 19.—Four more of those bills, i. e. "The Larceny, &c. Bill," "The Malicious Injuries to Property Bill," "The Forgery Bill," and "The Coinage Offences Bill," were read a third time and passed.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place on Monday, the 10th June, at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, J. F. Macqueen, Esq., Q. C., in the chair; when Mr. Walker Marshall read a paper intitled "Codification." A discussion ensued, in which the Chairman, Mr. C. Clark, Mr. W. M. Best, Mr. F. S. Reilly, and Mr. C. H. Hopwood took part.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1859, price 1l. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrina malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 29, 1861.

A VALUABLE addition to the law of this country has just been made by the Legislature in the stat. 24 Vict. c. 11, intituled "An Act to afford Facilities for the better Ascertainment of the Law of Foreign Countries when pleaded in Courts within Her Majesty's Dominions." Before, however, proceeding to state its provisions, it will be useful to advert to the previous state of the law, and the evils which that statute, and the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, intituled "An Act to afford Facilities for the more certain Ascertainment of the Law administered in one Part of Her Majesty's Dominions when pleaded in the Courts of another Part thereof," of which it is a great extension, were designed to remedy.

It has ever been an established principle of law, that courts of justice do not take judicial cognisance of the laws of foreign countries—whenever the existence of such comes in question before a court, it must be proved as a fact. And this is not peculiar to the English law, for it may be looked on as a maxim of general jurisprudence. (See Heinec. ad Pand., pars. 4, § 119; Id., para. 1, § 103; Story's Conf. Laws, § 637, 5th ed.) But how is such a fact to be proved? The obvious and usual mode was by the testimony of witnesses skilled in the law of the country in question. Whether a witness offered for this purpose stood in a position to entitle him to give evidence on the subject as an expert was of course a question to be decided by the court or judge, and several reported cases shew that this was occasionally a matter of some nicety.

The inconvenience, and often the inefficiency, of this kind of evidence are well known to every practical lawyer. Partly owing to the uncertain character of the subjects to which they depose, partly owing to the circumstance that it is almost impossible to indict for perjury a man who only swears to his belief, testimony of the loosest and most dangerous kind is daily given in courts of justice by almost every species of experts—medical men, surveyors, &c. The testimony of lawyers as experts is less frequently required, but when it is, great conflict of opinion is often to be found among the witnesses. On questions relating to the law of France in particular, the most discordant opinions of eminent jurists and practitioners from that country are not unfrequently adduced in our courts—a fact which inevitably leads to one of these inferences—either that a loose standard of morality exists among the learned of that country; or, what we believe far more likely, that the law of France is in a very unsettled state upon many important matters—a conclusion much at variance with the favourite, though most erroneous, notion of many at the present day, that the Codes Napoléon have succeeded in expelling all doubts from French jurisprudence, and reduced the whole law of that country to a small volume, which every person, lawyer or layman, can carry in his pocket, and interpret for himself. And, whatever may be said of the evil resulting from courts of justice being compelled to resort to the testimony of experts to prove the laws of countries which are "foreign" in the proper sense of the word, it almost amounts to absurdity in the case of countries which are foreign in a technical sense only—i. e. those which, though governed by different laws from England, are still under the dominion of the British Crown, such as Scotland and the like.

To provide some remedy for these evils the two statutes to which we have alluded were passed. The 1st section of the former (the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63) enables the courts in one part of her Majesty's dominions to remit a case for the opinion in law of a superior court in any other part thereof. By sect. 3, when a certified copy of the opinion is obtained, either party to the action may move the court to apply that opinion, "and the said court shall thereupon apply such opinion to such facts in the same manner as if the same had been pronounced by such court itself upon a case reserved for the opinion of the court, or upon special verdict of a jury; or the said last-mentioned court shall, if it think fit, when the said opinion has been obtained before trial, order such opinion to be submitted to the jury with the other facts of the case, as evidence, or conclusive evidence, as the court may think fit, of the foreign law therein stated, and the said opinion shall be so submitted to the jury."

This statute, it is obvious, went only a small part of the way towards remedying the mischief. But it has been more effectually attacked by the second—stat. 24 Vict. c. 11. The 1st section enables any of the superior courts within her Majesty's dominions to remit a case, with queries, to a court of any foreign state or country with which her Majesty may have made a convention for that purpose, for ascertainment of the law of such state. By sect. 2, when a certified copy of the opinion is obtained, either party may move the court to apply that opinion; "and the said court shall thereupon, if it shall see fit, apply such opinion to such facts, in the same manner as if the same had been pronounced by such court itself upon a case reserved for the opinion of the court, or upon special verdict of a jury; or the said last-mentioned court shall, if it think fit, when the same opinion has been obtained before trial, order such opinion to be submitted to the jury, with the other facts of the case, as conclusive evidence of the foreign law therein stated, and the said opinion shall be so submitted to the jury: provided always, that if, after having obtained such certified copy, the court shall not be satisfied that the facts had been properly understood by the foreign court to which the case was remitted, or shall on any ground whatsoever be doubtful whether the opinion so certified does correctly represent the foreign law as regards the facts to which it is to be applied, it shall be lawful for such court to remit the said case, either with or without alterations or amendments, to the same or to any other such superior court in such foreign state as aforesaid, and so from time to time as may be necessary or expedient."

There is another important provision in this statute, namely, that the courts in her Majesty's dominions may pronounce an opinion on a case remitted to them by a foreign court.

It is worthy of observation that the enactments in both these statutes only provide for the case where an action is pending, and do not (as it should seem) extend to the case of impeachment, indictment, criminal information, or information for penalties. No doubt in such cases there is less necessity for them, and the nature of the proceedings in criminal cases might render their application somewhat more difficult. Still the exclusion is not quite satisfactory; but then "nihil simul inventum est et perfectum."

There is one remarkable discrepancy between these statutes. According to the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, the opinion returned by the tribunal to which the question is sent is rendered "evidence, or conclusive evidence, as the court may think fit;" according to the 24 Vict. c. 11, it is to be "conclusive" evidence. The first act certainly went a great way, in leaving it to the court instead of the jury to determine whether evidence is conclusive or not; but the alteration in the second act, directing that it shall be "conclusive," is not an improvement. Where the case of a litigant party depends on a question of foreign law, it is rather strong to permit the court, ex mero motu, without, or perhaps even against, his consent, to ask the opinion of a foreign tribunal on the question, take that opinion as conclusive, and deprive the party of all right to encounter it by independent evidence. Such legislation savours not a little of what is commonly called "red tapism."

Notwithstanding these and other objections, however, the above enactments are undoubtedly improvements in the law.

DEATH OF THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

WE have to record the decease of the Lord High Chancellor, John Lord Campbell, which took place very suddenly on the morning of Sunday, the 23rd June. His Lordship presided in the House of Lords on Friday, the 21st instant. The next day he sat in the Court of Chancery, attended a Cabinet Council, entertained some friends at dinner, and retired at about eleven P. M., apparently in perfect health; but about eight the next morning was found dead, sitting in his chair, under circumstances clearly shewing that he must have died instantaneously, and without pain. The age of the deceased is variously stated, some fixing it at seventy-seven, others at seventy-nine, others at eighty-two, and some at eighty-four. In the House of Lords on Monday evening Lord Redesdale, the Deputy Speaker of the House, having taken the chair, Lord Granville, after stating that he believed the case was without precedent, moved the adjournment of the House, which was agreed to unanimously; after the noble lord, as well as Lords Brougham and St. Leonards, had paid a proper tribute to the memory of the deceased.

The life of the late Lord Chancellor is a very remarkable one, and has already been commented on in the public journals. We do not propose to go into the history of his life at present, and will conclude with the following extract from The Standard of the 25th June, which calls it—"A lasting example to all Englishmen, that with no genius, only ordinary mental capacity, and few attractive qualities" (our contemporary might have added, "struggling against the disadvantages of having received his education out of England, and of a provincial accent"), "a man of good physical constitution and steady industry, employing tact and sagacity, and always aiming at a high mark, may rise to the very highest position in our free country."

The Attorney-General, Sir Richard Bethell, Q. C., M. P., has succeeded Lord Campbell as Lord Chancellor. The successor to the Attorney-General has not yet been named.

Correspondence.

BUCKLEY v. HOWELL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Notwithstanding the opinion expressed in the article in your last number (ante, p. 235), I venture to think that the question, whether mines and surface may be disposed of separately by trustees for sale, is not finally disposed of by the above-mentioned case.

Let us examine the matter apart from any consideration of the interests of the beneficial tenant for life, which (as it appears to me) have been allowed to confine it a little.

The true question is, not whether the tenant for life may or may not derive some incidental advantage from the exercise of the power in a particular manner, but whether we may or may not reasonably suppose that the settlor intended to authorise such an exercise of it. The Master of the Rolls says in his judgment that he can see no difference between the cases of minerals and of timber—that in principle they are the same. But, with all deference, I would submit that there is this very essential difference between the two cases—that to sell land, reserving the timber, is an altogether unusual and obviously inconvenient plan; while to sever the minerals from the surface, and deal with them separately, is an ordinary, and often a convenient and profitable, plan; and this being so, I confess it appears to me as probable that a settlor, when authorising a sale of the whole or any part or parts of his property, meant to sanction the sale of the surface to one purchaser and the minerals to another, as that he meant to sanction the sale of one field to one and of another field to another.

That the tenant for life may, in some cases, obtain an advantage by such a severance, is true; but though, doubtless, this is to be taken into consideration in inquiring as to the settlor's probable intentions, it is not necessarily an objection to the power being exercised in the manner contended for. A tenant for life without impeachment of waste may fell the timber on an estate, and then get it sold, and the money invested in the purchase of another estate, with more timber on it; and, on the other hand, an estate with timber on it may be sold, and an estate with no timber bought; and the answer to objections founded on consequences of this kind is, that the settlor must be supposed to have foreseen those consequences, and that he nevertheless created the estate for life without impeachment of waste, and the trust for sale; and if the trustees unduly and collusively favour the tenant for life, it cannot be doubted that the remaindermen have a remedy against them in equity. Beet, C. J., appears to have put the decision as to timber, in Cholmeley v. Paxton, on the true ground, when he said (in the passage quoted by the Master of the Rolls) that to sell the land without the timber would be "a cause of confusion and litigation, which could not fail to be injurious to both the vendor and vendee." But this is a reason which does not apply to a sale of the surface without the minerals. On the whole, therefore, it must, I submit, be concluded, that though the decision of the learned judge in Buckley v. Howell may be right, yet (so far, at least, as it is founded on the previous cases relating to timber) it is founded on a mistaken analogy.

Rebuts.

A Letter to the Right Hon. Sir G. C. Lewis, Bart., Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the Present State of the Criminal Law. By WM. RIBTON, A.B., T.C.D., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

[Shaw & Sons. 1861.]

MR. M'MAHON in the last session of Parliament, and Mr. Butt in the present, respectively introduced bills into the House of Commons for allowing a new trial in criminal cases. These bills were rejected. During the debate on the latter, Sir G. C. Lewis, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, opposed the bill, and in the course of his speech asked, in defence of the present system, whether it could be asserted that innocent men are often convicted under it. This question seems to have rather provoked the ire of Mr. Ribton, and induced him to address the present Letter to the Home Secretary, some extracts from which we shall proceed to lay before our readers. At pp. 3 to 5, Mr. Ribton states his object thus:—

"Before I close this Letter I will take the liberty of answering the question. For the present, give me leave to draw your attention to what, a priori, are the anomalies and evils of the present mode of administering the criminal law, and what are the remedies by which those evils, or at least some of them, might be removed.

"I will not now enter into the inquiry as to whether there ought to be a power of moving for a new trial on matters of fact in all criminal cases. That is a large question, and into which, for the purposes of the present inquiry, it is not necessary for me to enter. I will confine myself to a subordinate branch of the subject, and endeavour to point out a mode by which, in the simplest possible manner, a change of a very desirable kind might be effected that would be productive of great public good, by rendering improper convictions less probable than they are at present.

"The act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, which established a court for the consideration of Crown cases reserved, has been neutralised to a very great extent by the very unwise provision which leaves the reservation of a point of law solely at the discretion of the presiding judge.

"It is hardly necessary, I trust, that I should guard myself against being understood to apply any of the remarks which I am about to make to the judges of the superior courts. Before any of those it is not in vain that one objects to evidence that is legally inadmissible, or asks for a case to be reserved if there is anything in the point at all worthy of further and fuller consideration. Wherever any one of those learned magistrates presides, a feeling of trust and confidence fills the mind and pervades the court; no desire is manifested to obtain convictions; the counsel, and especially the prosecuting counsel, are kept properly in check; the principles of law and the rules of evidence are respected; and everybody knows and feels that justice is administered with impartiality and independence.

"But, in a numerical point of view, how small is the proportion of criminal cases tried before the superior judges to those which are disposed of before inferior tribunals! And although all the important and serious cases, as far as regards the magnitude of the offence, are reserved for the assizes, yet a great number of cases of vital consequence to the parties concerned, of vast complication as regards the facts, and involving nice and difficult points of law, are tried at quarter sessions. Of the magistrates I am not at all desirous of saying a word disrespectful, but I must speak of what I know and have seen, and I repeat, that to leave to courts so constituted the final disposal, if they please it, of all matters of legal discussion that may arise, is an enactment so absurd, so mischievous, so unredeemed by a single recommendatory quality—nulla virtute redemptum—that it would baffle the most refined ingenuity to assign any satisfactory reason for its existence.” . . . .

“If this difference between things civil and criminal were told to the ignorant inhabitant of another hemisphere or another world he would not believe it. He would suppose that the narrator was either a dreamer or a madman. ‘What!’ he would indignantly exclaim, ‘is a man’s life and character of less value than a 5*l.* note? Are judges, even the wisest, the greatest, and the best, supposed to be liable to error when they have to try some trumpery question of damages, or to decide upon a certificate for costs; and are other inferior judicial functionaries, no matter how obscure or unenlightened, presumed to be invested with a preternatural infallibility when trying cases involving ruin to character and penal servitude for years?’” (p. 10). . . . .

“But, then, are innocent people convicted? Who is there that, with the experience even of the last few years fresh in his recollection, can refrain from answering this in the affirmative? These cases, however, which it is unnecessary to enumerate, were great and important ones, in some of which men’s lives were in danger; and under such circumstances, especially when a great outcry is raised by the public press, I admit that the inquiry at the Home Office does step in most opportunely to prevent an unjust sentence from being carried into effect. But leaving the leviathans, and coming to smaller fry, what an amount of injustice may be done! Before the tribunals to which I am alluding, how many innocent people are convicted, of whom the public know nothing, for whom the Secretary of State cares nothing, and in reference to whom, if an inquiry were demanded, the very stones of the Home Office would shift themselves in their places before a satisfactory investigation could be obtained, unless, perhaps, that investigation were sought for by some very influential person—some one who could write up a government, or some member of Parliament who could make himself very troublesome if he wished!” (p. 11).

The following is Mr. Ribton’s remedy for the evils which he denounces:—

“Make the appeal on all points of law to the courts at Westminster a matter of right, if counsel are willing to undertake the responsibility of it, and lo! all the evils of the present system are removed. Once give the judges at Westminster Hall absolute control over the inferior courts of criminal jurisdiction, and the whole system will be changed.” (p. 16).

And at the same page—

“I do not at all think that the result of the change would be to produce a great crop of questions to be argued before the courts at Westminster. It would do nothing of the sort. It would make those who are now supreme more careful and circumspect. It would make them feel that they were speaking in the presence of the superior judges; that everything they said might be reviewed elsewhere; and that, however desirous they might be to do justice, it would be still more desirable for them to administer it according to law, and not by the light of their own rude conscientiousness, and trained, but yet undisciplined sagacity.”

It is evident that Mr. Ribton’s mind is deeply imbued with the notion, which with many at the present day has become an axiom, that whatever course of procedure is right and proper in civil is necessarily so in criminal cases. To this axiom we cannot subscribe, for reasons too numerous to enter upon at present; and the House of Commons, by rejecting in a very decided manner both the bills to which we have referred, seems to be of the same opinion. Still, with respect to the immediate subject to which his Letter is confined, Mr. Ribton certainly makes out a fair case for discussion. He avoids, however, dealing with the question, whether it is advisable to subject the prosecutor of every indictment for every offence, however trivial, to the expense of appearing before the court of appeal in London to support the conviction, if one takes place, merely because the counsel for the accused takes on himself the responsibility of asserting that some point of law raised at the trial will bear argument. As to prisoners who are undefended by counsel, their case appears to have been altogether overlooked by Mr. Ribton. Ought they also to have the right of bringing up every case to the court of appeal, if some point of law is raised which they deem arguable? And we are not quite sure that Mr. Ribton has answered the question put by Sir G. C. Lewis. The latter asked, are innocent men often convicted? The gist of Mr. Ribton’s pamphlet is to shew that persons who may or may not be guilty are often convicted without due regard being had to the rules of law and evidence. In corroboration of this, witness, among others, the following passage:—

“Just see a little in detail how the system works. Evidence is offered on the part of the prosecution, of the inadmissibility of which no one who knows anything of the rules of evidence can entertain a doubt. The prisoner’s counsel objects. The judge, thinking that there ought to be a conviction—and thinking so, I will fully admit, conscientiously, but at the same time, by so doing, usurping the functions of the jury—does not see exactly how the evidence can be rejected, and admits it. What redress has the prisoner’s counsel? None at all. He may ask the judge to reserve a case; but it is of no avail. He may feel that his client ought upon the evidence to be acquitted, and yet know that the admission of this inadmissible evidence will turn the scale against him; yet he is completely powerless. The act of Parliament makes the judge, whether a man legally educated, or half legally educated, or not legally educated at all, supreme upon the point, and so the dismal scene closes, in undoubtedly, whether he be innocent or guilty, the improper conviction of the accused; and the court retires, after having passed a sentence, probably of penal servitude, congratulating itself upon the tact and skill with which the legal manoeuvring of counsel has been baffled, and justice been enabled to hold on her sublime way, untrammelled by any of those vulgar rules of law or evidence which great judges have sanctioned by their authority as necessary lights to guide us in the sometimes arduous and difficult search after truth,” (p. 6).

LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society took place at its rooms, 3, Waterloo-place, on Tuesday, the 18th June, Lord Brougham in the chair, when the annual report was read, and Lord Brougham unanimously re-elected president.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—The meeting of this body, fixed to take place on Monday, the 24th June, was postponed, in consequence of the sudden decease of the Lord Chancellor, who was president of the society.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 6, 1861.

THE promotion of Sir Richard Bethell, our late Attorney-General (now Lord Westbury), to the woolsack, has not only met with the universal approbation of the legal profession, but it will, we are assured, lead to most important results in the real and substantial amendment of the law.

Of late years it seems to have been thought that any lawyer of eminence at the common-law bar, however unversed either in the principles or details of equity jurisprudence, might safely, if not creditably, hold the Great Seals. Since the time of Lord Eldon they have accordingly been given to men, some of whom took their seats on the woolsack not only to administer, but actually to learn, equity. The constitution of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, whereby the Lords Justices may, when it is thought fit, sit with the Lord Chancellor, and, when they do not sit with him, may hear all those appeals which former Chancellors disposed of unassisted and alone, has to a great degree lightened the judicial duties of the Lord Chancellor, and at the same time has put it more in the power of those politicians with whom the appointment of Lord Chancellors in reality rests, whenever it may suit their own purposes or interests, family or parliamentary, to entrust the highest judicial post in the realm to the person who is by no means the most competent to fill it, either with honour to himself or with satisfaction to the public.

The evils arising from such appointments are manifold. A common lawyer, when appointed Chancellor, if an indolent man, however able in other respects he may be, is rather apt to affirm, than to examine and reverse, cases brought before him by way of appeal; if, on the other hand, he is industrious and laborious, the time he consumes in attempting completely to master each case, and the authorities applicable to it, is so much time subtracted from the other and more important duties of his office.

It is, moreover, a pitiable spectacle to see the first magistrate a novice in his occupation—slowly learning from counsel, arguing before him, the law he is called upon to administer—not exhibiting the mind of a master, but appearing in the position of a pupil even to the least enlightened of the audience in his court.

The late Lord Chancellor, Lord Campbell (of whom we would always wish to speak with the greatest respect), when he accepted the Great Seals, was not altogether unacquainted with equity jurisprudence; he was always diligent in his attendance upon the appeals in the House of Lords, and doubtless, ever aiming at the highest place, he had not neglected, during that leisure which the absence of official duties for a long period afforded him, to qualify himself, as far as possible, for the tenure of the woolsack. But reaching the object of his ambition at an age when most men think of retiring from the active duties of the world, we think that when the life of the noble lord is written by an impartial biographer, it will be confessed that his fame as a judge depends upon his judgments as Chief Justice of England, rather than upon his decisions as Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain. His judgments as Lord Chief Justice are models for their learning, perspicuity, and sound common sense; his decisions in Chancery, though better by far than might have been expected from his former pursuits, will not raise him as a Chancery judge to the level even of "modern Vice-Chancellors."

One of the greatest mistakes ever made by Lord

Campbell (except, perhaps, in becoming Lord Chancellor of Ireland) was, we think, his quitting the office of Lord Chief Justice of England (in fulfilling the duties of which he was second to none of his illustrious predecessors) for the office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, when not even his warmest friends and admirers could venture to say that he was, as an equity judge, equal to the place.

The appointment of the present Lord Chancellor is doubtless one of which it may be said that the right man has been put in the right place; and we trust that in future no person conversant only with the principles and practice of the common law will be raised to the woolsack from mere motives of political expediency, or as a reward for services to any political party, however long or faithful they may have been.

Lord Westbury takes his seat as Lord Chancellor with advantages which few of his predecessors since the time of Lord Eldon have enjoyed: he is perfectly familiar with the principles and procedure of equity jurisprudence, and his judicial duties, important as they are, will be, comparatively speaking, a light burthen to one with his quick apprehension and great professional acquirements. He will, therefore, have so much more time to devote to what we must venture to call the most important duty attached to his office—a complete and systematic attempt to reform the law.

What there should be done as to the amendment of our laws has been well pointed out by Lord Bacon<sup>o</sup>; and if it was necessary in the time of James I, how much more necessary is it in the reign of Queen Victoria? If Lord Bacon thought it expedient to recommend a digest of the decisions and a consolidation of the statute law in his time, how much more so is it that it should be attempted now, when the volumes of the statute law and of our reports are at least forty times more numerous than in the time of Lord Bacon, and are still increasing with lapse of time, in bulk and number, rendering the state of the law year by year more chaotic and confused.
